Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I can only say in closing that I shall vote "no" upon this measure, because it seeks to change a law which, so far as I know, is giving general satisfaction both to the banks and their customers.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Chair is going to enforce the rule limiting a Senator to two speeches, unless the Senate consents unanimously that Senators may speak three times on one question on the bill.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hardwick	Martin	Sheppard
Culberson	Henderson	New	Simmons
Curtis	Kenyon	Norris	Smoot
Fletcher	King	Nugent	Thomas
France	Kirby	Page	Tillman
Gallinger	Knox	Phelan	Vardaman
Gerry	McCumber	Pomerene	Wilfley
Gronna	McNary	Shafroth

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. LODGE, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. SWANSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. SHIELDS, and Mr. CALDER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to notify absent Senators to attend the session of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. STERLING, Mr. REED, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. BAIRD, and Mr. BECKHAM entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 8, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 7, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and everlasting God, our heavenly Father, who presidest over the destiny of men and of nations, continue Thy care over us, that we may increase intellectually, morally, spiritually, and become more potent factors in the civilizing forces of the world, and thus hasten the coming of Thy kingdom. To this end quicken the individual conscience, deepen our responsibilities, and guide us as a Nation.

Strengthen our arms on land and on sea, that with our allies we may secure an everlasting peace, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the preliminary business, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of the small business on the Speaker's table, he may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION.

Mr. TOWNER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. TOWNER. To correct the RECORD. On yesterday, on page 6113 of the RECORD, Mr. KEY of Ohio asked the question "Is it not a fact that your party caucused on this bill?" The RECORD is, "Is it not a fact that your party concurred on this bill?" I ask that the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, on April 25 I introduced the bill (H. R. 11694) for the erection of a public building at Eureka, Utah. It was erroneously referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. I ask unanimous consent that it be rereferred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the reference of the bill H. R. 11694 be changed from the Committee on the Public Lands to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Is there objection?

HOUSING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted for printing under the rule the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill H. R. 10265.

EIGHTY-SECOND BIRTHDAY OF HON. JOSEPH G. CANNON.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for two minutes in which to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is the eighty-second birthday of our old friend and neighbor and colleague, Uncle JOE CANNON. [Applause.] I said "old friend," but I did not mean that. He is the youngest man in the House. [Applause.] He is revered and honored and respected and loved by every man, woman, and child in America. There is no man who has ever served in the House for as long a period as he has, and I hope that he will live to be a hundred and serve every day of that period as a Member of this great body. [Applause.]

He is more vigorous to-day than he was 10 years ago, and as the years go on he continues to become more vigorous, mentally and physically. On his eightieth birthday he made the two greatest speeches ever made in the House, proving that age has nothing to do with intellect or vigor of mind and thought.

A patriot among patriots, he has fought the battles for the Union and for the preservation of the integrity and honor of the Nation as no other man ever has. He stands to-day the most conspicuous figure in American public life, and I hope and pray that God will continue to give him health and strength and vigor to continue the work that he has so well performed during all these years of public service, and that he may continue in the public service just as long as he wants to stay. That he will be able to do it, I am sure, for the constituency that he speaks for are united in their determination to keep him in the service as long as he is willing to work, and there is no man anywhere in all America more willing to work than he, and no man better qualified to legislate in these trying times than the distinguished statesman and patriot from Illinois—I mean of America—our own dear Uncle JOSEPH G. CANNON. [Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I was told this morning that somebody was liable to recollect that this was my eighty-second birthday anniversary. Frankly, I wish I could call it the seventieth or the sixty-fifth. The party who notified me said, "As like as not they will call on you to say something," and, as the time of this House is valuable under existing conditions, I put in black and white what I can get through in three minutes, and I will read it. [Applause.]

I thank you for remembering the anniversary of my birth, but I do not feel lonesome at the age of 82. The census repudiates the Psalmist's suggestion that threescore years and ten is the span of life, for by the last census there were more than 2,000,000 people in this country who had passed that age; there were about half a million who had passed the fourscore; 40,000 who had passed the age of 90; and nearly 4,000 who had passed the century mark. Physicians say that we are soon, through their skill, to live to be 150 years old. I wish to God they would hurry up. [Laughter and applause.]

I am not even the Methuselah of this body. There is my friend and colleague, Gen. SHERWOOD, nearly a year older than I. I can count half a dozen seniors who are no longer here, but hale and hearty. There is former Vice President Levi P. Morton, who served here in the Forty-sixth Congress, and is 94. William Pitt Kellogg, who was here in the Forty-eighth Congress, is 87. Gerry Hazleton, of Wisconsin, who came in with Gen. SHERWOOD and myself in the Forty-third Congress, is 89, and active in his profession. Henry W. Blair, of New Hampshire, who came in the Forty-fourth, is 84. "Tama Jim" Wilson, of Iowa, who came in the Forty-third, is 83, and Gen. Keifer, of Ohio, is six months older than I am. So I am only a cadet.

Long service here brings one consolation. As I have seen the gavel swing from one side of the Chamber to the other, I have become more and more convinced that patriotism is confined to no party [applause], and that while this is a Government through parties, and always will be, all parties work for the best good of the country according to their light. The Forty-third Congress was one of much party contention, with men of spirit and courage and convictions on both sides. We had here then Hawley and Barnum, of Connecticut; Blount and Alex. Stephens, of Georgia; Farwell, Fort, McNulta, and Morrison, of Illinois; Holman and Tyner, of Indiana; Kasson, McCrary, and Wilson, of Iowa; Beck and John Young Brown, of Kentucky; Blaine, Frye, and Hale, of Maine; Butler, Dawes, and the two Hoar brothers, of Massachusetts; Burrows, Conger, and Hubbell, of Michigan; Mark Dunnell, of Minnesota; Lamar and Lynch, of Mississippi; Bland, Crittenden, and Stanard, of Missouri; William Walter Phelps, of New Jersey; "Sunset" Cox, Tom Platt, Fernando Wood, William A. Wheeler, Clarkson N. Potter, and Stewart L. Woodford, of New York; Charles Foster, Garfield, Jewett, "Larry" Neal, and Gen. SHERWOOD, of Ohio; "Pig Iron" Kelley, Sam Randall, and Charles O'Neil, of Pennsylvania; Roger Q. Mills, of Texas; Luke Poland, of Vermont; Jerry Rusk, Philetus Sawyer, and Alex. Mitchell, of Wisconsin.

From the Territories were George Q. Cannon, of Utah; Martin Maginnis, of Montana; and Jerome B. Chaffee, of Colorado.

The House never had a greater number of virile men than in that Forty-third Congress, and a nonpartisan would have found himself uncomfortable here at that time when we had sharp battles over reconstruction legislation, especially Gen. Butler's civil rights bill. But I have no doubt that, confronted with the conditions of to-day, Blaine and Alex. Stephens, Ben. Butler and Lamar, Garfield, and Randall, and the other great party men of that day would have united as we have united to support the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy in defending the honor of the Republic. [Applause.]

Let Whig and Tory stir the blood,
There must be stormy weather;
But for some true results of good,
All parties stand together.

So sang the English poet, and so has the American Congress acted when there is a crisis in national affairs; so it will continue to act while the crisis lasts. We are here as Americans all, each and every one trying to do what he can to insure victory for our cause. When that has been achieved, when the stormy weather has passed, we shall resume our party associations and party functions, for this is, always has been, and, I believe, always will be a government through party. Otherwise it would become a government of despotism. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on some Wisconsin statistics relating to the third liberty loan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have asked this privilege because of the reiterated misrepresentation of the attitude of the citizens of Wisconsin toward this war, the constant impeachment of their loyalty, the vituperation and denunciation heaped upon them.

In reply to all this I ask to read recent newspaper dispatches and articles. I have here an Associated Press dispatch, which appears in the Capital Times of Madison, Wis.:

MILWAUKEE.

Milwaukee and the State of Wisconsin have subscribed practically 150 per cent of their quota to the third liberty loan, according to Fred Vogel, jr., chairman of the campaign. Milwaukee's total, including Friday's subscriptions, has reached $22,120,000, against a quota of $14,600,000.

The subscriptions did not close until Saturday night at 12 o'clock, but Friday's subscriptions had brought Milwaukee's total to $22,120,000, against a quota of $14,600,000. [Applause.]

The Racine Daily Journal-News of May 4 has a dispatch from Chicago with the caption—

Seventh district has 111 per cent. Wisconsin totaled 135.75 per cent.

I have since learned that Wisconsin has almost, if not fully, reached the 150 per cent mark.

CHICAGO, May 4.

More than 2,000,000 people have subscribed for the third liberty loan in the seventh Federal reserve district, which comprises the States of Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Iowa, and Wisconsin.

The States in the district have the following percentages:

Iowa, 134.74; Wisconsin, 130.75; Illinois, 128.66; Michigan, 111.06; and Indiana, 104.42.

Each State in the district subscribed more than its quota.

I have here an article from the Racine Daily Journal-News, the caption of which is—

Racine draws near the 225 per cent mark in third loan drive.

[Applause.]

Racine is my home city, a town of 50,000 or more.

The liberty-loan drive will close to-day and it is confidently expected that Racine will show no less than 225 per cent. In order to attain that percentage she will have to raise $2,700,000. The figures submitted at the liberty-loan luncheon last week were $2,653,000, leaving $47,000 still to be raised in order to reach the $2,700,000 position.

Ten miles south of Racine, in my district, is the city of Kenosha, with a population of about 35,000, a most enterprising business center.

Reports from Kenosha are to the effect that the second million dollars has been sold and that the quota has been doubled. Her allotment is placed at $1,087,000, and Friday night's reports fixed the amount sold at $2,200,000. If that is true, then Kenosha has gone over 200 per cent.

[Applause.]

The papers of yesterday contain the news that no other State in the Nation, in proportion to the number of its soldiers on the firing line in France, has suffered greater losses, if indeed as great, in killed and wounded than has Wisconsin. The casualty lists of yesterday told us that the little city of Fond du Lac had 89 of its soldier boys killed or wounded in the previous day's battle.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked a few minutes at this time, as I said, because of the constant malicious denunciation heaped upon the loyal people of my State. In conclusion I beg to suggest to these slanderers of Wisconsin that in the future when speaking of the State they indulge themselves more in truth-telling and less in plain and fancy lying. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, the facts justify me in remonstrating against the baseless attacks upon the loyalty of the people of Wisconsin, my native State. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4208. An act authorizing postage rates on airplane mail;

S. 4409. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes"; and

S. 4171. An act to declare unlawful associations purposing by physical force, violence, or injury to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change in the United States, and prescribing punishment for persons engaged in the activities of such associations, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3132. An act to amend the naturalization laws and to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States and other laws relating to naturalization, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 8, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I desire a leave of absence from the House for the period of one week, for the purpose of transacting some private business.

Yours, truly,

R. N. ELLIOTT.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the leave requested will be granted.

There was no objection.

SOLDIERS VOTING.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] has 15 minutes to address the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss for a few moments a question which I think is of great importance throughout the country, and which must be dealt with pretty promptly if it is to be dealt with at all. That is the question of our soldiers voting in the fall elections, those soldiers being in France as members of the American Expeditionary Force. I thought it might be of some interest to the House if I should set forth very hastily and imperfectly the experience that the other allied countries have had in this connection and the present status of the matter in the United States.

Of course it is not an easy question to solve. There are a great many difficulties which necessarily arise out of the problem of taking the votes of a large number of soldiers who are several thousand miles away, on or near the battle fields of France, and who are widely scattered.

We had in the Civil War a conspicuous illustration of what could be done. It is true that the problem then was much easier than the problem now, for the distance from the soldier's residence was much less. The soldiers were generally grouped by State units, and the numbers involved were much smaller. Fourteen of the Northern States allowed their soldiers to vote while they were in the field, and in the election of 1864, 154,045 of these soldiers cast their ballots. Lincoln received 119,754 and his opponents received 34,291. In other words, Lincoln received a vote three and one-half times as great, as far as the soldiers in the field were concerned, as that of his opponents. No one to-day will deny that a vote for Lincoln in 1864 was a vote for the right and for the welfare of the country. I think that leads us to the safe general conclusion that the soldiers in the field are apt to cast their votes the patriotic way. That is one of the two reasons why I think every effort ought to be made to permit their voting, if it is a possible thing. I do not wish to indulge in any heroics here to-day, but I think every man in this House and every loyal man in the country would like to have every soldier in France given the opportunity to cast his vote; in the first place, because of the reason I have just given, that he is pretty certain to vote right; and in the second place, and still more important, because it would offend the sense of justice of every true man if a soldier who was offering his all for the defense of the country were not given an opportunity to say how that country should be governed and by whom it should be governed during the period of the war. And yet at the same time we must recognize that the soldiers themselves would be the first to deplore it if the process of taking their votes involved a loss of military efficiency. Military considerations and exigencies must come first, and the soldiers themselves would to a man say that they would rather lose their suffrage, important as it is to them, than to have the machinery of carrying on the war seriously militated against by processes necessary to take the soldier vote.

England and France have had no general elections since the war began. The last general election in England was in 1910, and the next election in the ordinary course under their statutory requirements would have been in 1915. They passed a law indefinitely postponing that election, and there has been no general election of members of Parliament since 1910. So the question has not up to the present time arisen in Great Britain, although it is expected that possibly this coming summer there may be a general election called. It seems to be agreed that the British soldiers in France and elsewhere will be permitted to cast their ballots in that election if it is held.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. COX. How does England fill the vacancies in Parliament?

Mr. ROGERS. I am sorry to say that I do not know. I have tried to look it up, but without success.

Mr. COX. I have noticed in the press that there have been very few elections and very few vacancies filled.

Mr. ROGERS. I have observed the same thing.

In France the last election was in 1913, before the country went to war, and there is no prospect that there will be a general election in France in the near future.

New Zealand passed a law permitting soldiers to vote in 1914, within a month after the outbreak of the war; and if the House will permit I shall insert in the RECORD a brief article, taken from the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, which discloses the methods that New Zealand has adopted of registering the soldier vote.

In Australia there was an election in 1916 for parliamentary candidates. On December 20, 1917, there was a general referendum on the question of conscription. There has been a great deal said about the results of that election, but as far as I know the actual figures have never been published in the United States. Australia, I should say at the outset, had a soldiers' vote law. At the referendum election on the question of conscription held on December 20 the grand total vote for all Australia in favor of conscription was 1,013,361 and the grand total opposed to conscription was 1,178,256, a majority against conscription of 164,895.

I desire to call especial attention to the vote of the Australian soldiers outside of Australia; that is, of the Australian soldiers who were members of the expeditionary forces in France and elsewhere. Of those soldiers 91,365 voted in favor of conscription and 89,743 voted against conscription, a total of 189,108. You will notice that that is a very close vote—only 1,600 more over-sea Australian soldiers voting in favor of conscription than voted against conscription.

Of the members of the Australian forces who were in Australia the vote was 12,078 for conscription and 4,051 against conscription, or about 3 to 1 in favor of conscription.

I think it is remarkable that there was so close a vote in favor of conscription among the soldiers themselves. Of course, you all know that Australia as a whole went against conscription, but that fact does not explain the attitude of the soldiers. There were various causes that entered into the result that I have not the time to discuss now.

Now I want to speak of the situation in Canada.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Has the gentleman any suggestion to make as to how votes shall be cast? Is it necessary to go through all the preliminaries, as we do, for instance, in the State of New York?

Mr. ROGERS. That is what I want to come to as soon as I have referred to Canada.

Mr. COX. Would it be much trouble to the gentleman for him to insert the Australian law in the RECORD?

Mr. ROGERS. I should like, if I get permission, to insert an abstract of the Australian law in the RECORD.

In Canada the election was held on December 17, 1917. I happened to be with the Canadian forces just back of Ypres at the time that the canvass was taking place. It was interesting to see the method which the Canadians adopted in regard to making their soldiers vote in favor of the existing ministry, which favored conscription. I have in my hand a specimen of the soldier's ballot. It reads:

1. I vote for ———.
2. I vote for the Government.

And a big black cross is printed opposite this.

3. I vote for the opposition.
4. I vote for the independent candidate.
5. I vote for the labor candidate.

And then below it reads:

Put an X opposite No. 2, as shown above, and you vote against slackers and for the Union Government.

They were distributing these ballots and explanatory circulars broadcast among the soldiers.

Mr. MERRITT. The gentleman says that "they" were distributing them; who are "they"?

Mr. ROGERS. The distribution seemed to be done officially, but I do not know who the agents were. Wherever I went among the Canadian Army—canteens, mess halls, Y. M. C. A. huts, and officers' clubs—I saw great piles of these ballots and pamphlets urging the soldiers to support the Government.

Then there was also a pamphlet containing a speech delivered by Sir Robert Borden, the Canadian prime minister, at Halifax. I think it is very doubtful if the United States would tolerate that sort of pressure upon our soldier voters. I am interested to notice in a letter which The Adjutant General wrote me, under date of May 3, on this general question the statement that while soldiers in camp in the United States may vote "the dissemination of information or literature calculated to influence the voter in the exercise of his franchise" will not be tolerated. In other words, while the soldiers still in the United States are to be permitted to vote candidates or political parties are not to be permitted to use the methods of influencing the voters which were apparently the accepted order of things in France among the Canadians.

Whether it was the effect of this propaganda or whether it would have come anyway, I do not know, but there was a very remarkable unanimity in voting in favor of the Government among the members of the Canadian expeditionary forces. The majority of the Government in the present Parliament at Ottawa would have been 45 if the soldiers had not voted. As it is, it is 69. That is, as a result of the soldiers voting there is a majority in favor of the Government at Ottawa to-day greater by 24 than would have been the case if the soldiers had not voted. Twelve seats were overturned by the soldiers' votes, all the same way. Of the 54,200 soldiers who voted in Canada, 80 per cent voted in favor of the Government. Of the 101,259 soldiers who voted in France 92.89 per cent voted in favor of the Government; and of the 66,283 soldiers who voted in Great Britain nearly 95 per cent voted in favor of the Government. Two hundred and twenty-one thousand seven hundred and forty-two soldiers voted in all, 93.62 per cent of them being recorded in favor of the Government. For all parliamentary candidates all over the Dominion of Canada slightly over 1,000,000 men voted in favor of the Government and 757,000 men voted against the Government, which is in the ratio of about 4 to 3 in favor of the Government. Of the military only, 206,626 voted for the Government and 15,116 voted against the Government, which is in the ratio of about 14 to 1, as compared with the ratio of 4 to 3 in the case of civilian and military voters taken together.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. How was the issue defined so that one vote would be for the Government and the other against it?

Mr. ROGERS. Of course, the underlying issue in Canada was conscription, and the pamphlets which were distributed broadcast among the soldiers in France made that clear. The soldier's ballot is of the simplest possible description, as the gentleman can see, and it was by extraneous influence, by pamphlets, speeches, and harangues, that the issue was brought home to the soldiers as an issue of conscription. As in the Civil War, the soldier influence was overwhelmingly thrown in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war.

Mr. FESS. Were there candidates voted for in Canada?

Mr. ROGERS. Soldiers did not vote for candidates by name. This [exhibiting] was the only form of soldier's ballot.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I thank the gentleman from Virginia and the House. The problem in Canada, although the same distance as we are from the war zone, is nevertheless far easier than ours.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do the Canadian troops go in local units?

Mr. ROGERS. No; they are mixed up irrespective of their residence, although in general Canadians are assembled into Canadian regiments. As I was about to say, there was only one form of ballot for a Canadian soldier wherever he lived and wherever he was fighting. That contrasts very sharply with our problem. We not only have 48 States, each of which under the Constitution controls completely its own election machinery, but we have within each State very numerous combinations of officers to be voted for. So while the example of Canada and of the other countries is of some interest, the analogy is by no means perfect. Two objections to the Canadian system have been advanced. One is the element of delay. The result of the soldiers' voting was not announced nor were the successful candidates known until about March 1, two and one-half months after the voting itself. Even as it was, irregularity was charged because the returns were transmitted by cable instead of by mail. The other is the element of labor and expense. An ordinary Canadian general election costs $700,000. The election of 1917 cost over $3,000,000.

I have been anxious to learn what the policy of our War Department is to be in the case of the United States soldiers at the coming fall elections. I was interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] the other day, which bore on that question. I have been to the War Department several times before and since. I think it probably is fair to say that the policy of the department is still more or less in a state of flux. In a letter which the Acting Secretary, Mr. Crowell, sent to the secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts last month he lays down the very positive rule that there shall be no voting by our soldiers overseas. Even if it should be practicable, he says, under the law of some States to permit the soldiers of that State to vote, it would not be practicable under the more complex law of another State to permit it. He believes that equality is of the essence, and that we must not permit the soldiers of one State to vote and deny the right to the soldiers of another State. On the other hand, officers at the War Department have within a day or two repudiated the soundness of this argument.

Mr. MADDEN. By what authority does Mr. Crowell make that statement? Is that just an opinion?

Mr. ROGERS. This is an opinion which was sent to the secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in response to a letter of inquiry which was addressed to the Secretary of War.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that is a presumption on his part.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield, I think I can suggest difficulties. For instance, there is a uniform ballot law in one State, and in other States it is different.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that the Assistant Secretary of War ought not to presume to say what the States shall do. It is true they have military control, but nevertheless it seems to me each State is competent to legislate as to whether its men shall vote.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. There seems to be no opposition in the department to the soldiers in the field voting, if all have the opportunity of voting. In other words, if the States would provide machinery——

Mr. ROGERS. The department has no objection to the soldiers voting while they are in the camps of the United States. If this Crowell letter is to be deemed to represent the present view of the War Department it is conclusively opposed to the voting by our soldiers in France. I think that would also be a fair inference to be drawn from the recent letter of The Adjutant General to me. I will read a line or two.

As to the soldiers in France or on other foreign soil in the theater of war, the department has reached the decision that their vote can not be taken without serious interference with military efficiency.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman insert that in the RECORD?

Mr. ROGERS. I will put the entire letter in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did the gentleman make any investigation of the attempt made by the State of New York to have its soldiers in France vote early last November?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] was a moment ago on the floor. He was directly concerned with taking the over-sea votes of New York soldiers last autumn and perhaps can discuss it more thoroughly than I can.

There are three general plans of over-sea voting. One is to send over commissions to take the vote; the second is to have a very elaborate mail system participated in and authenticated by the military authorities on the spot; and the third is the plan to which the gentleman from Mississippi adverted the other day, and which his State has adopted, of simply sending direct from the United States to each soldier a ballot to be filled in by him, signed by him, and returned by him to the United States, without the intervention of the military authorities in any way whatsoever. The only practical objection to that plan in the view of the War Department officials is that it makes an enormous addition to the burden of mail. Otherwise they see no great objection to it. They do have a very definite and conclusive objection to any plan which involves the military in red tape or exertion of any kind. Hence either the War Department's view must prevail, under which only the Mississippi plan could be utilized, or Congress must in some way take speedy action. If the Mississippi plan is to be taken as the standard, special sessions of the various State legislatures must be promptly summoned to enact the appropriate legislation. The Mississippi plan has the merit of simplicity and of being the only one acceptable to the War Department. The objection to it is that it can not be fully safeguarded and that error and fraud may easily creep in.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman understands, of course, that these laws were passed by Indiana and the various States some time ago, whereas the Mississippi law was passed last month dealing with this very question.

Mr. ROGERS. At least a dozen States—Kansas, Nebraska, Massachusetts, New Jersey, North Carolina, for instance—are wrestling with this problem to-day. It is in the hope that I may crystallize the issue that I have talked here these few minutes this morning. We must act promptly if we are to act at all. If we can get State action along the lines of Mississippi the soldiers overseas will have a chance to vote. I believe that they will vote wisely, for the right against the wrong, for the patriotic candidate against the unpatriotic candidate. I believe that these advantages will far outweigh the possibility of error. Consequently I think appropriate action should speedily be taken by our State legislatures, acting in cooperation with the War Department, to enfranchise their over-sea citizen soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks I print a letter upon the subject of soldiers' voting, which I have recently received from The Adjutant General of the Army:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 3, 1918.

Hon. JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. ROGERS: Referring to your letter April 20, 1918, in which you request information relative to the arrangements which have been made for taking the votes of soldiers at the various State elections, I have the honor to inform you as follows:

It has been decided by the department that, so far as the soldiers stationed within the borders of the United States are concerned, their votes at either a primary or a general election may be taken by the several State Governments without serious interference with military operations or with the training and discipline of the men. Pursuant to this decision, the following order was issued to all commanding officers in the United States:

"Upon application by the secretary of state, or other proper officer of a State Government, to the commanding officer of a department or division for permission to take and secure the vote of officers and soldiers of said State serving in said command and within the borders of the United States, for either a primary or general election of said State, such commanding officer shall specify a place or places where all such officers and soldiers in such command may exercise their State franchise, and shall allow the properly qualified election officers of such State the opportunity to secure the votes of its citizens in such command at the place or places so designated, and at or during such specified period or periods of time, and conforming as near as may be to the request of said State officer in this respect as shall not interfere with military efficiency. The place or places so designated shall be in such proximity to each and all sections of the troops as will permit them, under the regulations prescribed, to make deposit of their several ballots. Such election officers shall be permitted, if they desire, to erect at said place or places such inclosure or inclosures as may be necessary for the conduct of such election, and at said place or places, but not elsewhere, to disseminate information and literature for the instruction of the voter as to the method to be pursued by him in the marking and casting of his ballot, but this latter privilege shall not be construed to permit the dissemination of information or literature calculated to influence the voter in the exercise of his franchise."

As to the soldiers in France or on other foreign soil in the theater of war, the department has reached the decision that their vote can not be taken without serious interference with military efficiency.

Very respectfully,

H. P. McCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

I also print a letter from Benedict Crowell, Acting Secretary of War, to the secretary of state of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts:

The honorable, the Secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Boston, Mass.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of March 27, 1918, with reference to the matter of taking the vote of Massachusetts soldiers by mail after they arrive in France. This plan can not be considered merely as affecting the soldiers from Massachusetts. Any plan adopted by the War Department must apply to all States. The scheme proposed must be considered as one to take the vote of many thousands of men at the first election, with an increase at subsequent elections. Following the detail of the proposed plan at the first election, there would be involved the following Government and Army operations:

1. Transportation to the United States from France of thousands of separate pieces of mail matter.
2. Transportation to France from the United States of a similar number of separate pieces of mail matter.
3. Making the necessary attestation by company commanders on a very large number of ballots.
4. The marking of thousands of envelopes by Army officers so as to obviate subsequent censorship, which means that such officers—
   (a) Must examine the contents of these envelopes.
   (b) Mark them for censorship.
   (c) Seal the envelopes.
   (d) Deposit them in the mail.
5. Return transportation of thousands of separate pieces of mail matter from France to the United States.

Considering thus in detail the work that would have to be performed in order to take the vote under the Massachusetts plan, I am forced to the conclusion that an even greater burden would be placed on the Government and the military authorities than would be placed upon them if commissioners were sent to France to take the vote, which latter method has already been considered as impracticable and which would so interfere with the efficiency of the troops as to render its further consideration impossible. There is no doubt as to the desirability of allowing the soldiers to vote. These men are entitled at this time to have a voice in the affairs of their country. But I also believe that they would be the last ones to insist upon exercising the franchise, because I am certain that they must clearly see that such a course constitutes an impediment to military efficiency; and I am sure that their one great duty and desire is to overcome the enemies of our country.

Unfortunately, the exercise of the elective franchise at the battle front is incompatible with the full exercise of the purpose for which our men are there assembled. The matter has been thoroughly canvassed, upon the ground in France, in the light of efforts made to collect the soldier vote during the fall of 1917. It was decided that this could not be done under the commissioner system without serious interference with military efficiency. Slight consideration of the details to be gone through under the Massachusetts plan, as set forth above, must convince one that that plan places upon the officers of the Army and the entire military machinery an even greater burden than under the commissioner system. We have a sufficiently large task on hand to win this war. The inevitable burdens are large enough. Nothing that adds to those burdens without adding to military efficiency can be seriously considered, and that which adds to them and at the same time decreases efficiency can not be thought of. The Massachusetts plan for taking the vote falls within this latter class.

The question of taking the vote of the soldiers has been repeatedly considered by the department, but is a very perplexing one. The difficulties in securing a plan which would clearly permit all the States to be represented in the vote cast have hitherto proved insurmountable. For example, it is understood that seven States have provisions in their constitutions forbidding soldiers to vote. In a national election the votes of soldiers from such States, not being counted, might exercise a very important influence upon the election, and practically does not permit the equality of the States in balloting which is contemplated by our form of Government.

I regret that I do not see my way clear to express an approval of the plan proposed by you for the soldiers in France. There seems to be no objection to it for the soldiers in the United States.

Very sincerely,

BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

I also print a leaflet which was distributed broadcast among the Canadian soldiers in England and France just prior to the election of last December, and which illustrates the extensive propaganda carried on by the Union Government of Canada.

FROM THE UNION GOVERNMENT OF CANADA.

OTTAWA, November 21, 1917.

To the Soldiers of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces:

The Union Government is composed of leading men of both parties who have no use for party politics when we are at war.

Labor and agriculture are specially represented. We are out to sink our differences and serve our country. You are standing shoulder to shoulder and facing death for the cause of liberty and humanity, and we will stand together, too.

We are getting on with the war—nothing else matters—and we are going to send you the reinforcements you need. Canada's proud standing must be upheld, and we are therefore bringing the military-service act into operation.

EXEMPTION.

The war is not to be won by fighting only, and the act will safeguard every interest essential to win the war. In this connection do not forget these three points:

1. Families that have sent men to the front under the voluntary system will receive special consideration.
2. No man will be taken who is indispensable in his civil duties.
3. Canada has to supply herself and the allies with food. Men will be retained to secure the necessary production.

CONSCRIPTION OF WEALTH.

Those who live by the war without fighting must pay for the war. Wealth will therefore be conscripted by adequate taxation of war profits and increased taxation of incomes, and money will be saved by reducing expenditures at home.

PROFITEERING AND WASTE.

Measures are being taken to prevent—

1. Excessive profits.
2. Hoarding
3. Combinations for the increase of prices.
4. Waste.

And everything is being done to encourage thrift.

This nonparty government has wiped out the patronage system in the purchase of supplies, awarding of contracts, and appointments to the public service. This is more than any party government ever did or ever could do.

RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT.

A committee of the union cabinet is at work making arrangements for—

1. Demobilization.
2. The care and vocational training of returned soldiers.
3. Assisting them to settle on the land.
4. Adequate pensions for the disabled and the dependents of those who have fallen.

THE OPPOSITION.

Sir Wilfred Laurier is against conscription, and he says:

"As to the present military-service act, my policy will be not to proceed further under its provisions until the people have an opportunity to pronounce upon it by way of referendum. I pledge myself forthwith to submit the act to the people and, with my followers, to carry out the wishes of the majority of the nation as thus expressed."

This means either holding up the military service act for one year, during which you get no reinforcements; or if conscription is defeated that Canada will be out of the war. For you know as well as we do that voluntary recruiting is played out.

RESPONSIBILITY.

We say to you that in face of a determined enemy the responsibility of Canadian electors is tremendous, and we assert in conclusion that the whole question of Canada's effort in this war and of our future as one of the greatest nations of a world-wide Commonwealth is involved in that determination. It is our most earnest hope that these momentous issues will receive the consideration which their infinite importance demands. Meantime we bid you Godspeed in the supreme national duty which you have so splendidly undertaken and discharged for Canada, for our Empire, and for the world.

Yours, faithfully,

R. L. Borden, F. B. Carvell, W. T. White, S. C. Newburn, A. E. Kemp, P. E. Blondin, A. L. Sifton, T. A. Crerar, J. D. Reid, J. A. Loughead, A. K. Maclean, N. W. Rowell, George E. Foster, C. C. I also print a summary of New Zealand's emergency soldiers' voting law, passed in 1914, and of the Canadian law, passed in 1915. These summaries are taken from an article by Duncan Campbell Lee, Esq., entitled "Absent voting," and published in the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation for 1916, pages 333–345.

NEW ZEALAND'S EMERGENCY LAW FOR EXPEDITIONARY FORCES.

Just a month after the outbreak of war New Zealand passed the expeditionary forces voting act, by which members of the expeditionary forces sent from New Zealand to serve in the war were given a right to vote at the next general election and at the licensing poll to be taken at the same time. (See New Zealand Statutes, 1914, No. 16, passed Sept., 4, 1914.)

The machinery adopted is the simplest imaginable. The voter is given a voting paper bearing on its face:

"Electoral district of ———.
"Government.
"Opposition.
"Labor.

"DIRECTION TO VOTER.

"The voter must leave untouched the name of the party for which he desires to vote and must strike out the names of all other parties."

The section of the act which explains this unique ballot reads:

"Every vote given as aforesaid for any party shall be counted as a vote for the candidate who has been selected in the manner hereinafter described as the candidate representing that party in the electoral district in which the voter resided immediately before joining the expeditionary force."

A voting paper is to be supplied by an electoral officer appointed for the purpose to every member of the forces who applies for one. When the voting paper has been marked for voting by the soldier, he incloses it in an envelope addressed to the returning officer of the electoral district in which he resided when he enlisted and, having sealed the envelope, delivers the same to the electoral officer, whose duty it is to forward it to the chief electoral officer at Wellington.

The New Zealand plan involves the appointing of electoral officers for the several groups of the forces, wherever they may be. The duties of these officer must be performed sufficiently soon after the writ is issued to enable the marked ballot papers to reach the chief electoral officer before the date fixed for the general election.

When the chief electoral officer receives the envelopes, addressed as aforesaid, from the several electoral officers, it is his duty to forward them at least seven days before the general election to the returning officer of each electoral district, or, in the case of licensing voting papers, to the returning officer of each licensing district.

At the counting of the votes the returning officer opens the envelopes and deals with them as if they had been issued pursuant to an "absent-voter's permit," which has already been described, as provided for by the act of 1905.

This act of 1914 is strictly an emergency measure, ceasing to be operative at the completion of the next general election.

CANADA'S WAR LEGISLATION.

An act to enable Canadian soldiers on active military service during the present war to exercise their electoral franchise became a law April 15, 1915. (See Statutes of Canada, 1915, ch. 11.) It is strictly a war measure and is to remain in force only during the present war.

The soldiers entitled to vote are male British subjects of at least 21 years of age who within six months immediately preceding the date when appointed to or enlisted in the military forces of Canada had been resident in any electoral district in Canada for a period of not less than 30 days and were then qualified to vote there.

The act provides that a sufficient supply of ballot papers in a form prescribed and of envelopes for holding the same, with a form of affidavit printed thereon, shall be sent by the clerk of the Crown to the officer in command of the Canadian troops at Bermuda and to the secretary of the high commissioner for Canada in London, England. When the writ for a general election is issued, these officials are to be notified of the fact by cable, and they are required thereupon to distribute the ballot papers and envelopes among the officers commanding the squadrons, companies, batteries, etc., so that each volunteer soldier shall be provided with a ballot paper and envelope.

The form of ballot provided shows four blank ballot papers, each printed in English and in French:

1. I vote for ———.
   Je vote pour ———.
2. I vote for the Government.
   Je vote pour le Gouvernement.
3. I vote for the opposition.
   Je vote pour l'opposition.
4. I vote for the independent candidate.
   Je vote pour le candidat indépendant.

The form of affidavit reads:

"I (here insert full name), a (here insert rank and name of corps), make oath and say as follows:

"1. That within the six months immediately preceding the date when I was (enlisted or appointed, as the case may be) in the military forces of Canada the last place in which I was resident for 30 days is (here insert place of residence before enlistment, giving where possible the street address, range, township, or such other precise indication thereof as may be practicable) in ——— in the Province of ———, and that I am not qualified to vote in aby other electoral district.

"Or—

"1. That immediately before I was enlisted (or appointed, as the case may be) in the military forces of Canada I was qualified to be a voter at ——— in the Province of ———.

"2. That I have not marked any ballot paper for this election in any election district.

"3. That I am a British subject of the full age of 21.

"——— ——— (Voter's signature.)

"Sworn before me this — day of ——, A. D. 19—.

"(Signature, rank and corps of commissioner officer.)"

Every soldier who makes the affidavit is to be given a ballot paper, which he may then mark in the presence of a commissioned officer, but in such a manner as not to disclose to the officer or any other person how he is voting. He then folds the ballot paper and places it in the envelope, upon the back of which is a certificate to be signed by the commissioned officer to the effect that the document contained in the envelope was written in his presence by the person named, and that according to the best information at his disposal he believed the statements contained in the affidavit to be true.

The act provides how the envelopes are to be placed in suitable receptacles, securely fastened and sealed, and forwarded by post to Canada; how the returning officer shall give notice to all candidates that he will open packages containing soldiers' votes at a certain time and place, so that they or their agents may be present while the envelopes are being opened; and how the ballots are to be counted and doubtful cases settled.

If any envelope is not received before the close of the poll on polling day, it is not to be opened, but is to be kept with the other papers relating to the election, and when these are destroyed it is to be destroyed unopened.

The act also provides for holding a poll at each military camp or base at which volunteers are being trained in Canada for service during the war. (Ch. 11, sec. 5, p. 5.)

Upon the issue of the writs for a general election a proclamation is to be made notifying volunteers that they must make to the returning officer at each camp or base a written claim to the right to vote in a particular electoral district where each was qualified to vote at the time of his enrollment or enlistment, or where he resided for 30 days within the 6 months immediately preceding his enlistment. An affidavit must accompany each claim.

From the written affidavits filed with him the returning officer at each base or camp must prepare a list of soldier voters. He notifies the returning officer of each district that soldiers have claimed the right to vote for his district. The returning officer of each district then forwards to the camp or base returning officer a certified copy of the voters' lists for his district and telegraphs to him the names of the candidates nominated.

A poll is opened at the camp or base on the day fixed for holding the general election, and the usual officials are provided for the polling such as the Dominion election act requires.

A volunteer whose name is not on the list which has been prepared for the election may take oath and claim his vote as a qualified voter for any election district.

The military authorities at every camp or base are required to afford all facilities necessary for the holding of the poll.

At the close of the poll the votes are counted, and the returning officer telegraphs the result to the returning officers of the several electoral districts for which votes have been cast, and sends by registered mail immediately thereafter to such returning officers the ballot boxes as received by him from the deputy returning officers, having first sealed them as provided by the election law.

In case volunteers should be under orders to leave Canada subsequent to the issue of the writ but prior to polling day, the governor in council is empowered to hold a poll on a day previous to their departure.

Offenses against the act are enumerated and penalties prescribed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to direct the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] to the motion he made a few moments ago to correct the RECORD and to suggest to him that the RECORD, if corrected as he proposed, would not accurately set forth the facts. Now, as I understood him, he corrected the RECORD in this way. On page 6113, left-hand column, appears this question of Mr. KEY of Ohio:

> Is it not a fact that your party concurred on this bill?
> Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], in making the correction, moved to strike out the word "concurred" and to insert the word "caucused." That correction is proper, because "caucused" was the word used. But permit me to suggest to my friend from Iowa, who answered "Yes," that the Republicans of the House have never during the Sixty-fifth Congress caucused on any legislative measure. There is a well-marked, perfectly understood distinction between a caucus and a conference. I read not long ago that Senator GALLINGER had said that never since he had been a member of the Senate had the Republicans of the Senate caucused on any legislative measure, but that they have only conferences, which leave those attending them free to act as they may deem best for the country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In a moment. I think that the answer of the gentleman from Iowa should not be simply "Yes," but that it should be, "Yes; only it was not a caucus, but a conference."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentlemen what word the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] used?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. "Caucused."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What word did Mr. KEY use?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He used the word "caucused."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If that was the word he used, that would be the accurate record.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the gentleman does not understand the situation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman asked to correct the RECORD, and I understood the gentleman to say that Mr. KEY used the word "caucused." I do not know.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was not making a motion. I was simply suggesting to the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Louisiana rise?

Mr. ASWELL. I object to any consideration of this matter until the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] is present.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Permit me to say to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] and to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that I am not seeking to correct the RECORD at all as to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] said. That was done 10 minutes ago on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. It appears here that the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] has the word "concurred," and it should have been "caucused," as we all know. What I am suggesting is that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] ask unanimous consent to correct his answer so that the permanent RECORD when made shall state the historical truth. I do not want it to appear that the Republicans of the present House "caucused" on any legislative measure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would suggest that the RECORD ought to show what the gentleman from Iowa himself said.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If it does, why correct the RECORD?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But I merely expressed the wish the gentleman from Iowa would ask permission to correct his answer as I have indicated.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. You want him to revise his remarks? Is that it?

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] say?

Mr. TOWNER. I wanted to correct the language. The language is corrected and that is all I want to say. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is, in fact, criticizing my admission that we had a caucus. Of course, I presume the gentleman from Wisconsin is right, as he always is, and that I am subject to that criticism; but I am perfectly willing to let the RECORD stand as it is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

POSTAGE ON AEROPLANE MAIL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4208, and consider the same. It is a little bill to authorize aeroplane rates on mails.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4208. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report it.

A bill (S. 4208) authorizing the postage rates on aeroplane mail.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may require the payment of postage on mail carried by aeroplane at not exceeding 24 cents per ounce or fraction thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ESPIONAGE—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 507).

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 8753, known as the espionage act.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the conference report. May I make the point of order now or after the reading of the report?

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. LONDON. I make the point of order that the managers on the part of the House have exceeded their authority under the rules.

The SPEAKER. We had better have the report read, so that the House will know what it is.

The Clerk will read the conference report.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or attempt to obstruct"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite, provoke, or encourage resistance to the United States, or to promote the cause of its enemies, or shall willfully display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall willfully by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall willfully advocate, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of any country with which the United States is at war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That any employee or official of the United States Government who commits any disloyal act or utters any unpatriotic or disloyal language, or who, in an abusive and violent manner criticizes the Army or the Navy or the flag of the United States shall be at once dismissed from the service. Any such employee shall be dismissed by the head of the department in which the employee may be engaged, and any such official shall be dismissed by the authority having power to appoint a successor to the dismissed official"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That section 1 of Title XII and all other provisions of the act entitled 'An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 15, 1917, which apply to section 3 of Title I thereof shall apply with equal force and effect to said section 3 as amended.

"Title XII of the said act of June 15, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following section:

"'SEC. 4. When the United States is at war, the Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or concern is using the mails in violation of any of the provisions of this act, instruct the postmaster at any post office at which mail is received addressed to such person or concern to return to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed all letters or other matter so addressed, with the words "Mail to this address undeliverable under espionage act" plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such letters or other matter so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the senders thereof under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, Title I, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

On amendment No. 1, on which the House recedes, brings within the crimes denounced in section 1 of the bill those who "say or do anything except by way of bona fide and not disloyal advice to an investor or investors."

On amendment No. 2, on which the House recedes, is a matter of punctuation made necessary by amendment No. 3.

On amendment No. 3, on which the House recedes, adds the words "or incite or attempt to incite," making a person guilty who attempts to cause or incite, or attempts to incite, insubordination, etc.

On amendment No. 4: Here the House recedes with an amendment. This amendment relates to the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States. The Senate amendment reads "or discourage or willfully attempt to obstruct or discourage." The amendment agreed on strikes out all of this amendment except the words "or attempt to obstruct." With this amendment it will be a crime to willfully obstruct and also to attempt to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States.

On amendment No. 5: The House recedes with an amendment. The effect of this amendment is to modify the Senate amendment as shown in the bill printed with the Senate amendment, on page 2, line 21, by striking out the word "contemptuous"; on page 3, line 8, after the word "shall," to add "willfully"; and on page 3, line 15, to strike out the word "favor."

On amendment No. 6: The Senate recedes on this amendment.

On amendment No. 7: The House here recedes with an amendment. The Senate amendment was modified in conference by striking therefrom the words "in the executive branch." The Senate amendment provided for dismissal from the service any employee or official in the executive branch of the Government.

The amendment as agreed upon in conference extends this to any official or employee of the Government.

On amendment No. 8: The House recedes with an amendment. The change made in the Senate amendment by the conferees consisted in limiting section 4 of the espionage act as amended in section 2 of this bill by the words placed at the beginning of the section, "When the United States is at war."

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
WARREN GARD,
DICK T. MORGAN,
GEORGE S. GRAHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. Now, what is the gentleman's point?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, at the time this bill passed the House it provided for the punishment of certain acts, such as the conveying of false reports or false statements, with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces, or to promote the success of its enemies. It further provided a penalty for obstructing the sale of bonds or other securities. It provided a penalty for encouraging insubordination or refusal of duty. A number of amendments were adopted by the Senate, amendments which almost completely changed the character of the bill. An issue arose between the Senate and the House. The conferees, among other things, agreed to strike out four lines in the Senate amendment which completely changed the character of the legislation.

Mr. WEBB. On what page?

Mr. LONDON. The amendment designated in the printed copy as No. 6.

The SPEAKER. What is it in the report?

Mr. LONDON. It is page 3, line 21. It reads as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motives and for justifiable ends.

Now, I realize the rules of the House permit the conferees within certain limits to agree to a modification of the bill as it passes the House and of the bill as it passes the Senate, provided the character of the legislation is not changed. I contend that by receding from its disagreement to this amendment of the Senate they have destroyed the entire bill. They have destroyed all that this legislation was intended to accomplish.

Take, for instance, this case: A man is charged with obstructing the sale of bonds or other securities. He attempts to justify his position by arguing that there are means other than bonds of obtaining the necessary financial resources for the conduct of the war. He argues that instead of the ratio being, as to-day, 3 to 10 or 3 to 9, as between income tax and bonds, the ratio should be 8 to 2 or 9 to 1, or that all the income, all the financial resources necessary for the Government in the proper conduct of the war, should be raised by taxation. Unless he can prove his good motive, unless he is given an opportunity to prove his motive, unless he is given an opportunity to prove that his expression of opinion was honest and was calculated to better the condition of the people of the United States and to strengthen the Government of the United States; in other words, unless he is given an opportunity to prove the truth of his statement, he is deprived of every right under this bill.

Now, I realize there is not a more contemptible creature in the world than a spy. He has always been regarded with hatred. The very profession of a spy brings disgust to every intelligent man. I am not arguing against an espionage bill. I contend, however, there is enough law to-day to hang every spy in the United States.

By withdrawing its disagreement to this section of the Senate amendment the House conferees agreed with the Senate on a complete reversal of the policy of the bill, a complete destruction of its very object. I realize that technically they may strike out a few words, but this is a case where by striking out a few words they have taken the very bottom out of the bill. They have destroyed the very basis of the bill. The bill was not calculated to punish free opinion. The bill was not calculated to punish those who had economic theories to advance which may not be popular at the present moment, or which may not conform to the economic theories of a particular grand jury or a particular district attorney.

The bill was calculated to punish obstruction to the sale of bonds, to the sale of securities. The bill was aimed at, striking at, those who would encourage sedition and mutiny in the Army. The bill was calculated to strike at those who would interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces. While I can not go into the merits of the bill——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would request the gentleman from New York to read the Senate amendments and then read the changes that the conferees made in them.

Mr. LONDON. It is a part of another amendment, although it is designated here as a separate amendment. But it is really a part of the entire Senate amendment. It is No. 6. It reads:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motives, and for justifiable ends.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. You have read only a part of the Senate amendment. All preceding that, in italics, is a Senate amendment.

Mr. LONDON. That is what I said. By striking out this portion of the Senate amendment they have not only mutilated the Senate amendment, but they have mutilated the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. GORDON. But in responding to the Speaker you should have read the whole Senate amendment.

Mr. LONDON. If that was the intention of the Speaker, the entire Senate amendment begins on page 2, line 18. That is rather a long amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Read it.

Mr. LONDON. I shall read it.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of it?

Mr. LONDON. Number 5.

The SPEAKER. Let the gentleman read it.

Mr. LONDON. I read:

and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite, provoke, or encourage resistance to the United States, or to promote the cause of its enemies, or shall willfully display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall willfully advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

The conferees struck out the following four lines:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motives, and for justifiable ends.

Now, my contention is that by eliminating these four lines the conferees mutilated the House bill; they mutilated the Senate amendment. They completely destroyed all its meaning. They have deprived the people of America of a right, because if a war can not be conducted with the right of the people to hear the truth and speak the truth there must be something wrong about it. I contend that the more the truth is known to democratic countries the sooner the war will end in the triumph of democracy.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I understand this proviso was a part of the Senate amendment No. 6?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It was not placed there by the House.

Mr. LONDON. I stated that.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It went to the Senate, and the Senate included this proviso in the bill; and then it went to the conferees, and the conferees agreed to strike it out and the Senate receded from it?

Mr. LONDON. Yes. But suppose the House would pass an appropriation bill in connection with a celebration, appropriating money for 10,000 bottles of champagne. The Senate would make it 25,000 bottles of champagne. The conferees would agree to strike out the word "champagne" and make it 25,000 bottles. Would the conferees be in order?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The Senate puts in a proviso, and then they go into conference, and the conferees on the part of the Senate recede on their own motion from that amendment, which they have pay in, and which they have a perfect right to do.

Mr. LONDON. I am not interested in the question of whether they receded.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. They did recede.

Mr. LONDON. What I am interested in is that the words were stricken out, the effect of the striking out being to destroy the meaning of the bill. In other words, the House conferees could have agreed to the Senate amendment if they had retained these lines; but by striking out these lines they destroyed the meaning of the Senate amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman contend that the bill as it passed the Senate was changed by the Senate by inserting this amendment and then the amendment was receded from? If so, I take it that the House bill as it passed the House has not been changed by the House conferees.

Mr. LONDON. No. I contend that the striking out of these few lines destroys the meaning of the Senate amendment and completely reverses the policy of the House—the legislative intention of the House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The language that was stricken out was a whole Senate amendment. It was Senate amendment No. 6, separate and distinct from the Senate amendment No. 5, which the gentleman has read in connection with it.

Mr. LONDON. I know; but the fact that it is numbered here as a separate amendment does not mean that it is a separate and distinct thing. It is part of one sentence. It is not even separated by a period, and you can not strike out the lines without modifying the meaning of the Senate amendment.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not contend that these words:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motive, and for justifiable ends—

The gentleman does not deny that that language constitutes one separate and distinct amendment of the Senate?

Mr. LONDON. It constitutes a dependent sentence.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not catch my question.

Mr. LONDON. We are not here on the floor of the Senate. We are not to decide whether it is an amendment to a particular proposition that was before the Senate then. We are dealing with the amendment to the House bill. So far as we are concerned, we are concerned with the logical situation. The logical situation is this——

Mr. WINGO. One moment. The gentleman evidently has not caught my question. I want to ask him if he contends that that is not a separate and distinct amendment?

Mr. LONDON. I contend, so far as the House is concerned, it is an integral part of the Senate amendment.

Mr. WINGO. But does the gentleman contend that as a matter of mechanical structure in the bill——

Mr. LONDON. That has to do solely with the parliamentary situation as it developed in the discussion of the bill by the Senate.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman contend that a point of order can be made in the House because the conferees permitted the Senate to recede from one of its amendments to a House bill? Upon what does the gentleman base any such contention?

Mr. LONDON. I contend that the House managers, by consenting to the striking out of language which changes the character of the legislation, violated a rule just as much as they would have done by adding words which changed the character of legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not the gentleman arguing the merits rather than the point of order?

Mr. LONDON. I think I am arguing the point of order, but if I were given an opportunity I would argue the merits. I contend there are no merits in the action of the conferees.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman is very shrewdly stating a case with regard to the merits of the proposition without coming to the point of order at all. In the first place, the Senate inserted an amendment to a House bill, and then the Senate conferees receded from that Senate amendment, so that there is no point of difference between the Senate and the House on that matter. Wherein did the conferees exceed their authority in permitting the Senate to have its way on its own proposition?

Mr. LONDON. But the mistake the gentleman makes is this: He takes this number (6) that is placed in line 21, on page 3, as marking the logical separation between lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, and the lines which precede it. I contend that it is logically one thing; that as a matter of fact it forms a dependent sentence, the principal sentence of which precedes line 21; that it is logically inseparable, and that by striking out a part of a sentence, with the result that the meaning has been destroyed, the House managers have exceeded their authority.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman confirms what I said, that he is making a statement in support of something in which he believes, but which has nothing to do with the point of order. The point of order is that the House conferees exceeded their authority.

Mr. LONDON. Of course, I never say anything except what I believe.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is speaking in favor of something that he wants to get into the RECORD; that is the point.

Mr. LONDON. No. The chairman of the committee [Mr. WEBB] has consented to give me some time to state my position on the merits, and that has nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is for the Chair to decide, but I suggest that the gentleman has not sustained his point of order. He has been speaking on the merits from the beginning.

Mr. LONDON. I can not improve my argument. I am sorry I can not, because I think I am right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman could improve on his point of order.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. I understood the gentleman from New York had five minutes.

The SPEAKER. No; he is speaking on a point of order.

Mr. GORDON. If the gentleman will permit me, it seems to me the gentleman from Pennsylvania misapprehends the character and scope of this Senate amendment.

Mr. LONDON. By the way, will the gentleman yield there? I will tell him that he may injure himself by agreeing with me, so that he should be careful.

Mr. GORDON. Never mind about my injuring myself. I think I can take care of myself. The House passed this bill without the matter inserted in italics on pages 2 and 3. Thereupon it went to the Senate, and the Senate inserted a lot of stuff, plainly in violation of the Federal Constitution guaranteeing freedom of speech and of the press, and then, in order to remove part of the sting and poison from it, after very long debate, as we read in the newspapers, they inserted at the end of it a proviso that in prosecutions under the amendment of a page and a half inserted by the Senate, which provided a penalty of 20 years' imprisonment and a fine of $10,000, the defendant on trial might offer in evidence for words spoken or written proof tending to show that the facts alleged were true and that they were published or spoken with good motives and for justifiable ends. That being an integral part of the Senate amendment when it came back to the House, the point of order of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is that the Senate conferees destroyed the legality of their own amendment by receding from the saving clause. I think that is his position.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the constitutionality of the law. That is for the courts. The rule in this country ever since the Zenger case, which was prior to the formation of the Constitution, has been that the truth of an assertion can be offered in mitigation or defense. The Chair has nothing to do with that, and neither has the House. That also is for the courts. The only thing that the Chair has to decide is not whether he likes this bill or does not like it or whether the gentleman from New York likes it or does not like it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] has made a very ingenious argument The question is, Did these conferees exceed their authority? What did they do? The Senate receded from its amendment and the House conferees agreed to it. That is all there is to it one way or the other. It may be that it would be a very healthy process if the Senate would recede more frequently. [Laughter.] But, anyhow, whatever the fact may be about that, the Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] has an hour.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] if he will not agree to two or three hours' discussion of this bill?

Mr. WEBB. I think the gentleman from New York has already taken about half an hour.

Mr. LONDON. The Senate debated this bill for a number of weeks, if not months.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no.

Mr. LONDON. How long was the Senate debating it?

Mr. WEBB. About two days.

Mr. LONDON. I was under the impression that they had it for weeks.

Mr. WEBB. It is the Overman bill that the gentleman has in his mind.

Mr. LONDON. At any rate, if 96 Members can debate a bill for two days, I do not see why 435 Members should not be given an opportunity to discuss it for a couple of hours.

Mr. WEBB. As far as I am concerned, every Member will have a right to say what he thinks he ought to say on this subject; but I do not think the gentleman from New York ought to ask for two or three hours to speak. I told him I would give him 15 minutes. That is more than any other Member has asked for; and because he did not get more than 15 minutes from me I believe the gentleman made his point of order, and under that he got in a very considerable discussion of the merits of the bill.

Mr. LONDON. The time which I occupied on the point of order had nothing to do with the 15 minutes promised me by the gentleman, and I am not going to release him from that promise.

Mr. WEBB. I am going to give the gentleman 15 minutes. Mr. Speaker, when this bill passed the House it applied only to false statements for the purpose of injuring the sale of bonds. It went to the Senate; they discussed it in committee at a number of meetings, and amended it according to the italicized language in the bill. They added some new offenses and penalties therefor, and amongst them they condemned any person when the United States is at war who shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of the Government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States, and so forth.

The House conferees insisted on striking out the word "contemptuous," because it was a matter difficult to prove. Whether it is contemptuous depends somewhat on the man's attitude, his general appearance, and it made it difficult to prove. The Senate agreed to strike it out.

So it now reads:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite, provoke, or encourage resistance to the United States, or to promote the cause of its enemies, or shall willfully display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall willfully advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

The House conferees insisted on striking out the word "favor," because that is a mental attitude; and we struck out the words "German Empire and her allies," because that would include Bulgaria and Turkey, with whom we are not at war, and inserted "any country with which the United States is at war." We also struck out the word "discourage" where it says "whoever shall discourage enlistment." The Senate agreed, and so we made the amendment read "whoever shall attempt to obstruct the recruiting service of the United States," and so forth.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have been thinking about section 4, which, I think, is the hardest part of the bill to vote for. It has been added. That is practically the one that the House, by a very strong vote, when this bill was originally before it, struck out.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. When the original bill was passed in the House, the House was opposed to it.

Mr. WEBB. Under the espionage act, which we passed a year ago, the Postmaster General has refused mailing privileges to a number of publications.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am referring to section 4 of this bill.

Mr. WEBB. I know; but we put in the espionage act the following provision:

SECTION 1. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing, of any kind, in violation of any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the dead letter office, duly authorized thereto, or other persons upon a search warrant authorized by law, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

SEC. 2. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing, of any kind, containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States is hereby declared to be nonmailable.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I agree to all that. That meets with my approval, but that is not what I am talking about.

Mr. WEBB. I understand; but under that language, which we put in the espionage act, the Postmaster General has excluded publications containing pro-German propaganda and matter in violation of the espionage act.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And he ought to have the power.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; he ought to have the power, which he does have, and these propagandists get contributions from all over the country. They are receiving their strength through the mails of the United States; and in section 4 all we do is to give the Postmaster General, when he has satisfactory evidence, the authority to stop the delivery of that mail to any person violating the provisions of this act as we propose to amend it, and return it to the sender instead of delivering it to the propagandist.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is not all that section 4 does; that is only one of the minor parts of it. Let me call the gentleman's attention to what I have in mind.

The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or concern is using the mails in violation of any of the provisions of this act, instruct the postmaster at any post office at which mail is received addressed to such person or concern to return to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed all letters or other matter so addressed.

And so forth.

Now, what does that do? It does this: Here is a publication, a perfectly legitimate monthly magazine, in excellent standing throughout the country. It contains, we will say, that which purports to be a true statement of the exact condiions relative to anything connected with the war for a proper and laudable purpose. Now, the Postmaster General under this provision, for any reason on earth that looks good to him, can starve that publication to death in one week by stopping all letters coming to it. He can stop all money reaching it through the mail, stop all subscriptions coming to it; he can starve it to death in one week's time. There is no review, no redress, nothing.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, I think my friend ought not make that statement.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I want to make just that statement, just as broad and square as that, because that is the literal truth.

Mr. WEBB. He can go into the Federal court and have the action reviewed by mandamus or injunction.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He can not.

Mr. WEBB. It is done every day under the fraud-order statute, which is on all fours with this section 4.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He probably could under the old law, and that is the point I make.

Mr. WEBB. He can do it under the fraud-order law, and he can do it under this provision.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He can not under this. It says "for any reason satisfactory to the Postmaster General." Therein lies the vice of the whole thing.

Mr. WEBB. Does the gentleman think that is new language in the postal laws of this country?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not care whether it is new or old language. It is new in this application.

Mr. WEBB. Similar power has been in the Postmaster General's hands since 1890 with reference to all fraud matters.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Of course, power of that kind is given to the Postmaster General under certain conditions and purposes. I am not criticizing that or discussing it. I am applying the power of the Postmaster General to do this thing, to starve to death any magazine or newspaper in the United States in one week's time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman implies that you could starve a magazine to death for fraud, but not for treason.

Mr. WEBB. That is a good answer to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, the gentleman has not come within a mile of answering my question. I can see where he could do it for treason, and if that was written in the law nobody would criticize it, but treason is as far from this as Seattle is from being Elysium, and that is some distance. We are not discussing treason. We are discussing the power given to the Postmaster General.

Mr. GORDON. "For reasons satisfactory to him."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Satisfactory to him and to nobody else; and when that should be brought before a court the court would promptly and efficiently say, "We do not make the law, the law is written by Congress, and the law says any reason satisfactory to the Postmaster General is sufficient, and that we can not review." It does not have to relate in the slightest degree to treason, not in the slightest degree to anything of an improper character. If the tendency of the article in the newspaper is one that the Postmaster General does not like, he can close up the paper. I believe that we should give to the Postmaster General and to other officials every power necessary effectively to accomplish the legitimate purposes of this act, but we all know that partisanship is not always kept out of the conduct of officials in any administration, and this is the most dangerous power that I have yet seen conferred or attempted to be conferred upon any executive in this Government.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman gave the Postmaster General much larger powers when he voted for the espionage law than we ask him to give him now, because he gave him the power in the original espionage law, title 12, to shut out of the mails all of the newspapers of the United States that violated any provision of the espionage act, all of the Socialist organization papers that violated it, all propaganda that violated it. That keeps those things from going into the mails; but now here is the converse which they think they need, and that is where there is an organization or an individual engaged in that sort of propaganda, collecting money from all over the United States to carry it on, using the mails of this country, which should not be used for the purpose of undermining the very Government whose mails they take advantage of, then he can stop mail from being delivered to a person violating this act.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then, why did not the gentleman specifically put in the provision that the mail would be stopped only in the case where the publication was engaged in extending a propaganda of I. W. W.ism, of socialism, anarchism, or treason?

Mr. WEBB. We go further than that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. You do not go that distance at all.

Mr. WEBB. We make it for any violation of any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is what I say.

Mr. WEBB. Why confine it to the Industrial Workers of the World?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It may or may not be a violation of the provisions of the act. If the Postmaster General in his mind——

Mr. WEBB. He must have evidence.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If for any reason that looks good to him he thinks it in violation of the language of any of the many provisions of the act, then he can do this, and I want to say to the gentleman that the Postmaster General under this can stop and starve out in one week half a dozen of the leading magazines of the country for the articles which they published last month——

Mr. WEBB. They ought to have been indicted and put in jail if they violated any provision of the espionage act or any provision of the amendments we propose.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think so.

Mr. WEBB. If they violate the provisions of law they ought to be put in jail.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit me there, they have not violated the provisions of the law; but if the Postmaster General in his mind wanted to think they had, he could put them out of business.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman does not correctly quote the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have read it and I correctly quote it.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman says it is in the Postmaster General's mind. The language of the bill is "upon evidence satisfactory to the Postmaster General." It is the same language used in reference to fraud. Some years ago the mails were being used to prosecute all sorts of get-rich-quick schemes, and Congress passed an act and used the identical language in that act that is used here. As the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] says, it is proper to stop frauds, it is proper to stop treason. Here is what the Congress provided in section 3929 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of 1890:

The Postmaster General may upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person is engaged in any fraudulent lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme for the distribution of money, or of any real or personal property, by lot, by chance—

And so forth.

The language I call attention to is this:

The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him—

do certain things.

The Congress gave our Postmaster General power to break up great financial institutions, but they could not be broken up unless fraudulent. Now we want to stop the use of the mails by men who are using all sorts of propaganda to undermine our country in war.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Let me be specific with the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman from North Carolina wants the bill strong enough to curb treasonable doings of antigovernment people all the way from the red-handed Industrial Workers of the World, the dynamiters, the poison dark spreaders of revolution, and so on up to the white-livered rabbits who try to tear down the Army and the Nation under the guise of free speech.

Mr. WEBB. Anybody violating the provisions of this act and using the mails of the United States ought to have the mail privileges taken away from them.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Let me put a question to the gentleman. Was or was not the Metropolitan Magazine a short time ago suppressed or its passage through the mails stopped until a certain article was taken out of it?

Mr. WEBB. I did not read the article, but I know you can go to the courts if the postmaster exceeds his authority and mandamus him, and if it is a perfectly legitimate article you can send it through the mails.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Not under this.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In speaking of the lottery law, there is not nearly so much danger in the execution of that law as there is in the punishment of persons who might speak or write something.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that the lottery law was only one of the many different kinds of frauds mentioned in this act—all sorts of schemes to get rich quick, all sorts of frauds which were sent through the mails—and the Postmaster General was given the right, under evidence satisfactory to himself, to stop all money orders going to those persons practicing frauds. In 1890 the Congress confined the Postmaster General's power to stop money orders going to certain persons whom he found or had evidence to lead him to believe were using the mails for fraudulent purposes. Now, in the act of 1895 it went still further and gave the power to stop all mail matter—registered mail, letters, pamphlets, and everything else—and that statute is really broader than the one we are asking you to pass to-day.

Mr. FESS. That law was passed in time of peace, this in time of war. You would not think of executing this law in any other time except in war time?

Mr. WEBB. It is exclusively confined to the time when the United States is at war, and only then can this section be in force.

Mr. FESS. That is the saving element.

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir. I realize that this is a broad power——

Mr. FESS. It is.

Mr. WEBB. But we are living in unusual times. They tell us our Government—our whole system of running the war—is secretly and determinedly being undermined by pro-German propagandists; and is it possible anybody here desires that the use of the mails be given to the class of men who are trying to destroy the Government of the United States? I can not see the distinction in the powers granted. I do see a stronger reason for doing this now than in peace times, in order to give the Postmaster General the right to exclude such pro-German letters and propaganda from the mails.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield to my friend.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman stated an opportunity would be given to those who wished to speak on this bill. I am in favor of the bill, and I would like to have a little time.

Mr. WEBB. I will yield the gentleman five minutes. I simply wanted to get through with making the statement as well as I could, and I think I have covered the report, considering the interruptions.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Five minutes. I first yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] to present a conference report for printing under the rule.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report, together with a statement on Senate joint resolution 124, for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 124, providing for the registration for military service of all male persons, citizens of the United States or residing in the United States, who have since the 5th day of June, 1917, on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, under the terms of an act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act authorizing the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who presented this report, has just stated that these are unusual times, and I think he might have added ominous times in the life of the Republic. I think they are just such times that a bill of this kind should be introduced and enacted into law without one dissenting vote. I want to read a part of section 3, on page 2 of the bill:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite, provoke, or encourage resistance to the United States, or to promote the cause of its enemies, or shall willfully display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall willfully advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

I call that a splendid provision to curb the slander of those now opposing the Government in this great war. I wish it had included the willful hauling down and mutilation of the flag as well. There are but two sides to the great question confronting the people of the United States involving the welfare if not the absolute existence of our Nation. I do not think there is a place to-day where a person ought to be or can be except on the side of loyalty to our country and to the Army that is defending our country at home and abroad in a war that was forced upon us. [Applause.]

I am glad that they have seen fit to bring in this bill. I hope it will wipe the German propaganda out of our land. I hope it will tend to unite us like one man, with the sole and single purpose of winning the war, and those who will not ally themselves upon the side of loyalty to this country will be subjected to the penalties under the terms of this bill should their opposition become manifest. The bill itself comes very properly as being the first law enacted by the Congress of the United States in reference to the flag of our Nation, which in April, 1918, was one century old, and yet there never has been a Federal act passed protecting the flag or that prohibited a man from tearing it down, tearing it up, or wiping up the gutter with it, if he is so base and calloused of heart and brain. Italy, Greece, Russia, Brazil, Mexico, China, Spain, Portugal, France, England, and many other countries have a national flag law. Why not the United States of America where it means so much?

"The only flag of the United States known throughout the world is the Stars and Stripes."—(Fang Yue Tong v. U. S., 149 U. S. Rep., 11.)

Now for the first time we have a law which says that during the war and for the period of the war whoever slanders the flag shall be amenable to punishment by imprisonment for 20 years. And I am wondering, my friends and colleagues, what we are to do with the men who tear down the flag? It is done frequently. I saw in the papers of Sunday an account of an I. W. W. leader charged with assault on the flag, and tearing it down, in Paterson, N. J. I want to read the published statement found in the Washington Times of Sunday, May 5, 1918, day before yesterday:

I. W. W. LEADER CHARGED WITH INSULT TO FLAG.

PATERSON, N. J., May 5.

Adolph Lessig, secretary of the I. W. W., was arrested yesterday, charged with hauling down an American flag which had been placed on I. W. W. headquarters.

Lessig is alleged to have refused permission for decorators to hang the flag while they were preparing for a parade. Two detectives then hung the flag.

And yet there is no Federal law to punish or make it a crime to haul down the flag. Every one of our boys on the firing line in France is protecting the flag with his life. Ought not we in Congress make it treason or other compound and heinous crime to haul down the flag?

The Department of Justice of the United States issued the following statement, showing that we have no Federal statute protecting the flag:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The department is in receipt of so many letters asking information concerning the law governing the use of the United States flag that it has felt compelled to prepare the following general statement in answer thereto:

Statutory provisions with respect to the Attorney General giving opinions upon questions of law relates solely to inquiries submitted to him by the President or the head of an executive department, and it has been the uniform practice of the department to decline to answer such questions when submitted by other persons. It may be stated, however, that a majority of the States have passed laws regulating the use of the United States flag, the constitutionality of which was upheld in the case of Halter v. Nebraska (205 U. S. Repts., 34). At page 39, in a footnote, are citations to the laws of the various States which then had statutes of this character.

At the last session Congress enacted a statute act approved February 8, 1917, punishing the improper use of the national colors in the District of Columbia. The department is aware of no other Federal legislation bearing upon the subject, except that contained in section 5 of the act of February 20, 1905 (33 Stat. L., 725), prohibiting the registration of a trade-mark which "comprises the flag or coat of arms or other insignia of the United States."

Respectfully, for the Attorney General,

Assistant Attorney General.

President Johnson said, "Treason must be made odious." Gen. Dix said, "Whoever hauls down the American flag, shoot him on the spot." Gov. Yates, of Illinois, stated, when they had difficulty during the Civil War in a little town in southern Illinois concerning the flag, that they should run up the flag, and if anyone shot the man who dared to tear it down that he would pardon whoever did the shooting. And I am pleased that one of our colleagues, in a public speech, stated that he would defend without a penny of expense any man who shoots a person who pulls down the American flag. And are we less patriotic at this time, when our boys have gone into the trenches to defend the flag that we love and revere so much, that we should neglect to place a law on the Federal statutes providing against the tearing down of the American flag?

Why, in my own State it was hauled down and torn into shreds. They defiled it and used it for towels in wiping their hands. They never found the man who tore it down, but they found the man who wiped his hands on it, and ducked him in the river, through the ice, after tieing a clothesline around his ankle. And we have seen that in many places in the United States the flag has been insulted. This law will punish that. I want to support this bill, and certainly we should enact a law to protect the flag and punish anyone who dares to tear it down. One who would tear it down is a spy and a traitor, and can only have one purpose in destroying the flag, and that is to express his preference to another country, lend aid and comfort to our enemy, and show his contempt for our institutions and this glorious land that we now are trying to preserve with the lifeblood of the flower of our Nation. [Applause.] A good flag law will encourage patriotism and would punish those who would defy or defile it. It would make for law and order and lessen riot and disorder.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry for that, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this legislation and all necessary laws that are needed to produce law and order in the United States. The whole citizenship of America should aid in maintaining law and order and not permit mob violence in any place. We set a poor example for our soldiers and sailors that are sent to France to destroy tyranny and oppression there when we at home tolerate lynchings and attacks upon persons and property without regard to law. This country alone stands in shame and disgrace before the civilized bar of public opinion in that it has for years tolerated lynchings. The lynching and murder of hundreds of colored people at East St. Louis a short time ago and the lynching of Praeger last month at Collinsville, Ill., horrible and disgraceful as they were, are but instances of thousands of a similar nature just as bad that have taken place in this country annually in past years.

On April 8 I introduced a bill designed to protect citizens of the United States against lynching in default of protection by the States. When it is taken up by the Judiciary Committee of the House for consideration I shall offer some amendments to perfect it in details, and then I will ask to have it reported to the House and passed by the Congress, so that it may become a law at an early date. I believe its enactment into law and enforcement will result in wiping out for all time to come the most damnable crime known to civilized man. Since and before I introduced this bill I have received many strong indorsements of its provisions. I believe that the public conscience of America is now fully aroused to its necessity. The States can not be depended upon to do their duty in all instances. Gov. McCall, of Massachusetts, on April 10 last, in discussing lynchings, said:

The brutality of lynching does not at all surpass its cowardice. Nothing more contemptibly cowardly can be imagined than for a crowd of armed men to seize a single, unarmed man and put him to death. If such cowardice could be regarded as distinctive of a nation, no amount of heroism on the part of its soldiers in the field could make atonement for it.

There has been quite too much talk in our politics, even before the war, of hanging people to lamp-posts. The spirit of lawlessness has received an impulse from men who should be the leaders and teachers of the people. The first duty upon us, after supporting to the utmost our soldiers and our allies, is sternly to repress those barbarous exhibitions of lawlessness that have too often disgraced our country.

The Attorney General of the United States, on the 16th of April last, in an address to the executive committee of the American Bar Association at Richmond, Va., spoke in the same vein when he said:

We must set our faces against lawlessness within our own borders. Whatever we may say about the causes for our entering this war, we know that one of the principal reasons was the lawlessness of the German nation—what they have done in Belgium and in northern France, and what we have reason to know they would do elsewhere. For us to tolerate lynching is to do the same thing that we are condemning in the Germans.

Lynch law is the most cowardly of crimes. Invariably the victim is unarmed, while the men who lynch are armed and large in numbers. It is a deplorable thing under any circumstances, but at this time, above all others, it creates an extremely dangerous condition. I invite your help in meeting it.

I have recently made an investigation to get some idea of the number of people who have been lynched in the last three years, and I find a record in 1915 where there were 43 white and 49 colored lynched. Most of the white men lynched were Mexicans. In 1916 I find the number to be 8 white and 51 colored, and, in 1917, 2 white and 44 colored. Of the total number for these three years lynched, I find them charged with different crimes and offenses, but not in one-tenth of the cases was there a charge of that crime which some people consider lynching specially appropriate.

The horribleness of lynchings and mob violence is evident to all decent and civilized people. Congress should put an end to it, since the States in so many cases are unable to do so. The bill (H. R. 11279) which I have introduced on this subject is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11279) to protect citizens of the United States against lynching in default of protection by the States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the putting to death within any State of a citizen of the United States by a mob or riotous assemblage of three or more persons openly acting in concert, in violation of law and in default of protection of such citizen by such State or the officers thereof, shall be deemed a denial to such citizen by such State of the equal protection of the laws and a violation of the peace of the United States and an offense against the same.

SEC. 2. That every person participating in such mob or riotous assemblage by which such citizen is put to death, as described in section 1 hereof, shall be deemed guilty of murder and shall be liable to prosecution and, upon conviction, to punishment therefor, according to law, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction in the place where such putting to death occurs.

SEC. 3. That every county in which such putting to death as described in section 1 hereof occurs shall be subject to a forfeiture of not less than $5,000 nor more than $10,000, which may be recovered by action therefor in the name of the United States against such county for the use of the dependent family, if any, of the citizen so put to death; and if none, for the use of the United States, which action shall be brought and prosecuted by the attorney of the United States for the district in which such county is situated in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction therein. If such forfeiture is not paid upon recovery of judgment therefor, such court shall have jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof by extent or levy of execution upon any property of the county, or may compel the levy and collection of a tax therefor, or otherwise compel payment thereof by mandamus or other appropriate process; and every officer of such county and every other person who disobeys or fails to comply with any lawful order of the court in the premises shall be liable to punishment according to law as for contempt and to any other penalty provided by law therefor.

SEC. 4. That every State or municipal officer having the duty or power of preservation or conservation of the peace at the time and place of any such putting to death as described in section 1 hereof, who, having reasonable cause to believe that the same is being or is to be attempted, neglects or omits to make all reasonable efforts to prevent the same, and every State or municipal officer having the duty or power of prosecuting criminal offenses at such time and place who neglects or omits to make all reasonable efforts to prosecute to judgment under the laws of such State all persons participating in such mob or assemblage as described in section 1 hereof, except such, if any, as have been or are held to answer therefor in a circuit court of the United States, as provided in section 2 hereof, shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States, and shall be liable to prosecution therefor in any district or circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction in such place, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding five years or by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 5. That every State or municipal officer having the custody within a State of a citizen of the United States charged with or held to answer for any crime or offense who suffers such citizen to be taken from his custody by a mob or riotous assemblage of three or more persons openly acting in concert in violation of law with the purpose of putting such citizen to death or inflicting bodily violence upon him in default of protection of such citizen by such State or officers thereof, shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States and shall be liable to prosecution therefor in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the place where the same occurs, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding five years or by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 6. That any prosecution for either of the offenses defined in sections 2, 4, or 5 hereof, and in any action for the forfeiture imposed by section 3 hereof, every person who has participated in lynching or in the putting to death of or of the infliction of great bodily violence upon any person without authority of law, and every person who entertains or has expressed any opinion in favor of lynching or in justification or excuse thereof, or whose character, conduct, or opinions have been or are such as, in the judgment of the court, may tend to disqualify him for the impartial and unprejudiced trial of the cause, shall be disqualified to serve as a juror; and the attorney for the United States in such action or prosecution shall be entitled to make full inquiry thereof and to produce evidence thereon; and every person who refuses to answer any inquiry touching his qualifications on the ground that he may thereby criminate himself shall be disqualified as aforesaid.

Some people and some writers seem to think that such a law would not be constitutional. I differ with them in regard to this. The fourteenth amendment of the Constitution says in part:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law. Congress has the power to enforce this provision of the fourteenth amendment.

The early theory that the United States has no police power, so called, or power to protect life or punish crimes of violence within the States, is already superseded by judicial decision. It is now determined by the highest authority that the United States has such power, when a Federal right or duty is invaded or involved. This principle is neither new nor startling, though modern applications of it have attracted attention. For example, it is now held that the United States, by the hand of its marshal, may lawfully kill one who assaults a Federal judge traveling through a State in the course of his duty, and that the State can not hold the marshal to account for such killing (in re Neagle, 135 U. S., 1); and that the United States may punish, as for murder, one who kills a prisoner in the custody of a Federal officer within a State (Logan v. United States, 144 U. S., 263). The principle is that the persons so assailed are within the peace of the United States; that the United States owes them the duty of protection; and that the power of protection follows upon the duty.

The equality clause of the fourteenth amendment forbids the States to deny to any person within their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. This clause is judicially held to confer immunity from any discrimination as a Federal right. The protection which the State extends to one person must be extended to all. It does not forbid discrimination merely in the making of laws, but in the equal protection which the laws are designed to afford. Forbidding the State to deny equal protection is equivalent to requiring the State to provide it. Equal protection is withheld if a State fails to provide it, and the guaranteed immunity is infringed. The constitutional requirement may be violated by acts of omission no less than by acts of commission. The omission of the proper officers of the State to furnish equal protection in any case is the omission of the State itself, since the State can act only by its officers. (Tenn. v. Davis, 100 U. S., 257, 266; Strauder v. W. Va., 100 U. S., 303, 306, 310; Va. v. Rives, 100 U. S., 313, 318; Ex parte Va., 100 U. S., 339, 345; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S., 629, 639; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S., 3, 13, 23; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S., 651, 660 et seq.; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S., 356, 373; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S., 683 and (Harlan, J.) 700; In re Coy, 127 U. S., 731; Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S., 442, 447.) It would seem to follow that when a citizen or other person is put to death by a lawless mob, in default of the protection which the State is bound to provide for all alike, there is a denial of equal protection by the State, in the sense of the equality clause, which Congress may prevent or punish by legislation applying to any individuals who participate in or contribute to it, directly or indirectly.

The United States has, as all governments have, a political and legal interest in the lives of its citizens. If it had not full power to protect them in their lives within the States as it has elsewhere, it can be, as already observed, only because that duty rests solely upon the States. If so, it is a duty owed to the United States as well as to individual citizens. It would seem that open and notorious neglect or omission of this duty on the part of the State, by suffering lawless mobs to murder citizens for want of legal protection, may be declared an offense against the United States, and if so, that the United States may punish all persons who contribute to it.

Section 5508 of the Revised Statutes, which is taken from the act of May 31, 1870, is as follows:

If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, or if two or more persons go in disguise on the highway or on the premises of another, with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege so secured, they shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than 10 years, and shall, moreover, be ineligible to any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

A part of section 1980 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire or go in disguise on the highway or on the premises of another for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the law; or of equal privileges and immunities under the law; or for the purpose of preventing or hindering the constituted authorities of any State or Territory from giving or securing to all persons within such State or Territory the equal protection of the law; or if two or more persons conspire to prevent by force, intimidation, or threat any citizen who is lawfully entitled to vote, from giving his support or advocacy in a legal manner toward or in favor of the election of any lawfully qualified person as an elector for President or Vice President, or as a Member of Congress of the United States, or to injure any citizen in person or property on account of such support or advocacy in any case of conspiracy set forth in this section, if one or more persons engaged therein do, or cause to be done, any act in furtherance of the object of such conspiracy whereby another is injured in person or property, or deprived of having or exercising any right or privilege of a citizen of the United States, said person so injured or deprived may have an action for the recovery of damages occasioned by such injury or deprivation against any one or more of the conspirators.

This is taken from the acts of July 31, 1861.

These acts are construed to apply only to such rights as are granted by or dependent upon the Constitution, and valid and constitutional laws of the United States.

One of the matters which has been determined by the Supreme Court to be within the protection of these laws is the right of the Federal Government by penal laws to prevent discrimination against negroes serving on juries; and in ex parte Virginia (100 U. S., 339) the prosecution was maintained and conviction upheld, when the judge of a county court, whose duty it was to draw the juries for service, had discriminated against negroes in such jury service.

In Neal v. Delaware (103 U. S., 370) it was held that the exclusion because of their race and color of citizens of African descent from the grand jury that found and from the petit jury that was summoned to try the indictments, if made by the jury commissioners, without authority derived from the Constitution and laws of the State, was a violation of the prisoner's rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States, which the trial court was bound to redress, and the remedy for any failure in that respect is ultimately in this court upon writ of error. The court held that the exclusion of negroes from such grand and petit juries by officers charged with their selection, although such exclusion was no doubt by State constitution or laws, denies the equality of protection of law, denies the equality of protection secured by the Federal Constitution and law.

It has been more than once held that rights and immunities created by or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States can be protected by Congress. The form and manner of protection will be such as Congress, in the legitimate exercise of its legislative discretion, shall provide. These may be varied to meet the necessities of the particular rights to be protected.

In the case of Strauder v. West Virginia (100 U. S., 303) a law which denied colored persons the right to sit on juries was declared void. The court said:

It (the fourteenth amendment) was designed to assure to the colored race the enjoyment of all the civil rights that under the law are enjoyed by white persons and to give to that race the protection of the General Government in that enjoyment whenever it should be denied by the States.

The court also said:

It is not easy to comprehend how it can be said that while every white man is entitled to a trial by a jury selected from persons of his own race or color, or rather selected without discrimination against his color, and a negro is not, the latter is equally protected by the law with the former. Is not protection of life and liberty against race or color prejudice a right, a legal right, under the constitutional amendment?

The act of Congress of March 1, 1875 (18 Stat., par. 3, p. 336), enacts that:

No citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified from service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors, who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid, shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not more than $5,000.

This was held to be constitutional in the case of Ex Parte Virginia, supra. The court laid stress upon the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, especially:

No State shall make or enforce a law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States. * * * Nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

And upon the last section, which gives Congress the power to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation.

One of the privileges or rights granted the colored man by this amendment is citizenship; another is that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; another is, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; another is, nor deny to any person within its jurisdictions the equal protection of the laws.

If a county judge can be punished for refusing to draw his jury so as to include any of the negro race, and if exclusion of negroes from the jury list is sufficient to deny equal protection of the law to a defendant who is to be tried by a jury to be drawn therefrom, the question arises as to why may not the Federal authority protect one of its citizens while in confinement or custody awaiting trial by a jury with the composition of which it has exercised material power?

Why is not a refusal to put into operation the laws against lynching as much within the jurisdiction of Congress as is the refusal to obey a State law by a judge in drawing a jury?

If Congress can punish a judge for refusing to include any negroes in the jury list for the purpose of trying a negro, why can it not punish a sheriff for refusing to protect a negro while awaiting trial?

If Congress has the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions which prevent a State from taking life and liberty or property of its citizens by due process of law, why may it not determine that in order to fulfill this guaranty it may make the sheriff directly amenable to its jurisdiction in such matters?

The Supreme Court has said:

The equality of the rights of citizens is a principle of republicanism. Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of this principle if within its power. The duty was originally assumed by the States, and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more. (United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542, 555.)

The power in the right of the Federal Government to see that the States do not deny any person the right to due process of law, and to see that they do not deny him the equal protection of the law will be construed to be equal to the task. No one of us dare say that the limit of this power has been reached. No person who genuinely believes in the necessity for the exercise of State rights in full vigor will desire to tempt the Federal Government to the full awakening of these latent powers. If the States fail to give adequate protection, how shall the Federal Government exercise its power to fulfill the guaranty of the fourteenth amendment?

The amendment itself says that this shall be done by appropriate legislation. Who shall determine what is appropriate legislation? Manifestly Congress in the first instance, finally the courts.

The States lagged in the making of adequate pure-food laws. The result is that this is now nearly entirely regulated by the Federal Government.

The States did not adequately meet the narcotic-drug nuisance; the result is that the Federal Government is now reaching down into the daily lives of the citizens in this respect to a degree which would have been thought impossible a few years ago.

Congress has exercised its rights in enacting legislation with reference to child labor in the various States. It has done likewise with reference to intoxicating liquors. If Congress has felt its duty to do these things, why should it not also assume jurisdiction and enact laws to protect the lives of citizens of the United States against lynch law and mob violence? Are the rights of property, or what a citizen shall drink, or the ages and conditions under which children shall work, any more important to the Nation than life itself? I believe that Congress has ample power to enact the legislation that I have recommended. I believe it would stand the test of the courts and be a great blessing, as well as aid in wiping out the greatest blot upon the honor of the American Nation.

Mr. WEBB. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, the subject is so vast that I can not attempt to analyze it in so short a time, and I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request. I would like to extend and revise my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the privilege to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is recognized.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, this bill as amended by the Senate is one of the most mischievous pieces of legislation ever imposed upon a free people. There is nothing to parallel it. I have carefully examined the history of European countries during the last century, and I have found nothing to compare with it. There is nothing so drastic to be found during the restoration of the Bourbons in France, or during the period which followed the triumph of the Prussian Government after the suppression of the revolution of 1848, or in the constitution of the Prussian Kingdom. The strange thing about it is that it is entirely unnecessary. There is enough law to reach every spy. There is enough law on the statute books to punish the encouragement of insurrection, or the encouragement of any violation of the law, or of resistance to law. The argument is advanced that this drastic bill will do away with the curse and disgrace of America—lynching and mob rule. That is not true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I regret I can not yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman just one question.

Mr. LONDON. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman think this bill will take away that which happened in my own county, where, when our boys marched away, Socialists and I. W. W.'s stood on the sidewalk and spit at them?

Mr. LONDON. I dispute the correctness of that statement, and I wish the gentleman would be at least wise enough not to identify the Socialists with the I. W. W.'s.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But the Socialists contribute money to the I. W. W.'s, do they not?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, as to the I. W. W.'s, whenever employers are a band of thieves and conscienceless oppressors they deserve the I. W. W. Where the employers deal decently with organized labor they have no I. W. W.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I dispute that.

Mr. LONDON. The I. W. W. is a working out of the law of compensation. It is a symptom of an unhealthy condition.

Mr. NORTON. Does not the gentleman approve of the I. W. W.?

Mr. LONDON. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LONDON. I can not stop to discuss the I. W. W. The official report of the President's Mediation Commission declares that "The I. W. W. has exercised its strongest hold in those industries and communities where employers have most resisted the trade-union movement and where some form of protest against unjust treatment was inevitable."

The vice of this bill is that it blindly follows the old sedition law of 1798. I have carefully examined that law and a number of works describing that period of American history, when everything was in a state of ferment, when young democracy had not yet learned what democracy meant, when every public official, beginning with a Member of Congress and ending with the President, was victimized by unscrupulous and brutal calumny and vilification. A law was then passed to protect the personnel of the Government. It was to protect the Member of Congress and the President from being unjustly accused of all sorts of infamous crimes. The accusing of members of the Government was a common practice in that day. What does this bill do?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr MADDEN. Of course, if they were guilty of any of those practices they ought to be accused, ought they not?

Mr. LONDON. Yes; but the evil of that day was the indiscriminate abuse of everyone in office. Washington and Jefferson and Hamilton, all and everybody, were denounced in the most unscrupulous way.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no objection to accusing a man, whether in high office or not, if he is practicing these things of which he is accused.

Mr. LONDON. What I am trying to bring out is that a law that was intended more than a century ago to protect primarily the citizens occupying high Government positions should not be made now to apply to institutions.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman state what the effect of the passage of the alien and sedition laws had upon the party that passed them?

Mr. LONDON. It will not do the gentleman any good to go into that, because Republicans and Democrats have combined here in swallowing this bill, and it is no excuse for a Republican to say that a Democratic Congress wants it, because you are helping to adopt it and helping to carry it into effect. It will not do you any good at all to recall the fate of the Federalist Party. The law that was calculated to protect persons is now applied to institutions. See what an absurdity has been reached. It is made a criminal offense to utter abusive language about the Constitution. Can you abuse the Constitution? Can you offer abusive language to the Constitution? Can you use scurrilous language about the Constitution? What is the Constitution? A constitution is the expression of the body of political and legal thought of a particular period. Any individual who starts out with the proposition that he can not improve and has nothing to learn is universally regarded as a hopeless fool.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. In one moment. A statesman who proceeds on the theory that the Nation has nothing to learn is leading the people into the quagmire of stagnation.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. While we are in this period of stress, it ought to seem good to everybody——

Mr. LONDON. Exactly; I want to meet that very point——

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). To keep within certain limits, and they ought not to undertake such changes as would embarrass the country in its hour of need.

Mr. LONDON. I expect to meet that very point. The theory prevails that in war times we are not to criticize our institutions. The contrary is true. War calls forth all the energies of a nation; it is not only guns or soldiers, but all the spiritual and intellectual and economical forces of the Nation that are called into action.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. LONDON. I can not yield. The gentleman no doubt will make some irrelevant remark about some I. W. W.'s out in his district.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; I want to ask——

Mr. LONDON. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LONDON. When we are put to the test we discover everything that is wrong with us. When a nation is called upon to exercise all its energy, then all the weakest spots in its economic, social, and political institutions come to the surface. Take as an illustration the fact that 29 per cent of the young men of this country when called into military service have been found to be physically defective. We have discovered that there is an alarming condition of illiteracy in some parts of the country. Now, of course, some students of those subjects knew that before. We all protested in ordinary times against profiteering, but we never realized what a curse it was; we never realized it to the extent that we realize it now, and every economic institution of the country is closely connected with its political institutions, and therefore to say to the people that just at the very hour when you discover the defects, just at that hour of stress you are not to suggest any changes or make any criticism is poor advice indeed. That is the point I was driving at. That is at least a partial attempt to answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

We do not hesitate to change war implements proven to be inadequate. We should not hesitate, we should not flinch from making such changes in the economics and politics of the country as the needs of our time command. The world is in a state of rapid transformation. We have got to change. We have got to improve. Charles M. Schwab is the last person in the world from whom I would expect radical thought. Mr. Schwab, former president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and now in charge of the construction of ships for the United States, has said recently:

We are at the threshold of a new social era. This new order of things may work great hardships for many of us. It is going to come upon us sooner than we expect. It is the social renaissance of the whole world. Some people call it socialism, others call it Bolshevikism. It means but one thing, and that is that the man who labors with his hands, who does not possess property, is the one who is going to dominate the affairs of this world, not merely Russia, Germany, and the United States, but the whole world.

This great change is going to be a social adjustment. I repeat that it will be a great hardship to those who control property, but perhaps in the end it will work inestimably to the good of us all. Therefore, it is our duty not to oppose, but to instruct, to meet, and to mingle with the view of others.

The translation from the old to the new order of things will be so gradual that we will hardly realize that it has occurred. The pendulum will swing so far that you and I may find it hard for a time, but there will be an adjustment.

The aristocracy of the future is not going to be the aristocracy of wealth; it is going to be the aristocracy of men who have done something for their country and for the world at large. Such men will be true aristocrats.

I am not sure that this coming change in society will be better for you or me, but whether it will or will not, we must be prepared to accept it, for it is coming, and it is nearer than we think.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. WEBB. I would like to give it.

Mr. LONDON. Only one minute.

Mr. WEBB. I yield to the gentleman one minute. Before doing so let me say to the gentleman that there is nothing in this bill that will prevent all the things the gentleman speaks of being quietly done.

Mr. LONDON. I differ with the gentleman. Why, we have it from the President, the occupant of the White House—and for the first time in the history of the United States this phrase has been used by a President of the United States, and after the enactment of this law I would not be surprised to find that the citation of this language would be illegal—the President says, in a letter addressed to a Democratic leader in New Jersey:

The old party slogans have lost their significance and will mean nothing to the voter of the future, for the war is certain to change the mind of Europe as well as the mind of America. * * *

The men in the trenches, who have been freed from the economic serfdom to which some of them have been accustomed, will, it is likely, return to their homes with a new view and a new impatience of all mere political phrases, and will demand real thinking and sincere action.

The President sees great changes coming. The world is on the move. As long as a man supports this Government—and I do not know of anybody who can afford to refuse to support the people or the Government of the United States in this the greatest crisis in the history of the world—as long as a man supports the Government, give him the chance to speak his mind and to think; because when you prohibit the expression of thought you prohibit thinking, and you turn the people into cowards, hypocrites, and spies.

Mr. WEBB. Does the gentleman think a man has got to use scurrilous and abusive language about the Constitution?

Mr. LONDON. No; but when an ignorant judge or a grand jury composed of butchers and shopkeepers and retired business men is to decide whether the advocacy of a new economic or social theory is a violation of law, then God save the country.

The powers conferred upon the postmaster to deprive of the benefits of the mail service any person who, in the infallible judgment of the postmaster, is unsafe are unprecedented and are characteristic of the vicious thing before us.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I have had requests for about 25 minutes more than the hour ordinarily allotted under these circumstances. I ask unanimous consent that we may have an hour and 25 minutes instead of one hour, and that my friend from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] have the privilege of selecting any gentleman on his side who would like to speak.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that his time be extended 25 minutes, and that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] have the privilege of allotting his portion of that time as he desires. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to get about three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] will control the time on that side.

Mr. NORTON. That is all right.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Reserving the right to object, will that give reasonable time for some of us who would like to say something about this important bill?

Mr. WEBB. I have the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] marked down for some time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not know whether that would enable the gentleman from Minnesota to give me that time.

Mr. WEBB. Then I will give it to the gentleman.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Make it 30 minutes.

Mr. WEBB. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that there be 1 hour and 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], a member of the committee.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, there has been written a very noble sentiment called "The American's Creed," which, it seems to me, is a direct answer to much that has been spoken in criticism of this bill. It runs this way, and I wish everyone within our borders would carry it in his heart:

I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a Republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it; to support its Constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its flag; and to defend it against all enemies.

[Applause.]

That is the American creed. In time of peace we have permitted seemingly a great latitude in what we might charitably call loose speech. In time of peace it has been thought that the best way to get this speech eliminated is to allow persons to speak it, having due regard to the fact that people do not view it seriously or pay it any great regard. But in time of war I insist that right now the time has come when loose speech should be obliterated, when there should be a tightening of action toward one thing, and that is the coordination of everything in America for the purpose of obtaining victory for American arms and to establish freedom and justice for all time here in our own United States. [Applause.]

In discussing this bill, referring to statements made, I do not think at all seriously, but made rather in the interest of a propaganda which we all understand, a propaganda so unsubstantial that no basis of permanent governmental achievement can be placed upon it, I have only to say that this bill is an amendment of a bill that passed in 1917 when the United States was preparing for war.

On June 15, 1917, we passed the espionage law. We made our first step toward national conduct in war. That declared certain things to be unlawful. Now we are in war. Five hundred thousand young men are in the fighting field and millions will be in camp for preparation for the one purpose of defending us and supporting our Constitution. It is said here in debate that the word "abusive" in this act in respect to the Constitution means nothing. I say it means everything. I am willing to trust a jury of my peers, be they farmers, plumbers, or merchants or what not, I am willing to trust a jury of my peers, honest, patriotic, loyal American citizens, to say whether an act or speech is abusive or not. To say that the Constitution is something of which there should be no penalty for its destructive abuse is to say that of the very instrument which the Member who spoke when he raised his hand in this House and swore to support the Constitution of the United States. He knows, and every right-thinking man in the United States and the world knows, what it means to abuse the Constitution of the United States. The temper of our people, not here alone expressed in this House, but the temper of our people who are winning the war by their solidarity and devotion, the temper of the American people is not going to stand for destructive abuse of the American Constitution. [Applause.]

I say that the Constitution is a written instrument upon which our laws are builded. We are progressive, and it, of course, demands a change from time to time, but I am for a change of construction and against a change of destruction, and I am against any man, party, or propaganda that seeks to destroy the Constitution of the United States of America. [Applause.]

Therefore, in respect to that which has been said in criticism of this bill, I desire to reply, as a member of this Committee on the Judiciary and as a member of the conference committee, that it is merely an extension in the time of war, a necessary extension in time of war, and time of war only, to punish speech and act which have for their purpose the giving of aid to the enemy and the destruction of our American institutions. I am for this bill, and I feel that everybody in this House should be for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen may think it is necessary to protest their loyalty at this time and to make it more manifest by high-sounding proclamations of their hatred of treason. For myself, I think it entirely unnecessary. I hope I have demonstrated my position otherwise. I have at all times been ready to support to the uttermost the preparations which this administration is making to carry the war to a successful conclusion. If I have made any objection, it has been that these preparations were not carried far enough and continued fast enough, for I have been from the first insistent that no halfway measure would bring us success in this great conflict. But the fact that I am heart and soul in support of the war does not deprive me of my right or dispense with my duty to criticize what I consider to be unnecessary in this bill. If such be the case, then the fact that war is going on at this time makes it incumbent on us to abdicate all of our functions, go home, and stay there.

This bill, as I understand it, is aimed particularly at the I. W. W.'s, and in that respect and so far as its provisions affect this organization and all others that oppose our Government, I heartily commend it. For the extermination of these pernicious vermin and their like, wherever they are found, no measures can be too severe to suit me. Coming to a free country they undertake to use its freedom to destroy the Government that has welcomed them. They ridicule, despise, and shower abuse upon our flag, and when taken to task invariably claim the benefits of its protection. Continually promoting anarchy, they are always demanding the rights of a loyal and patriotic citizen. I am not inclined, as everyone knows, to violent language, but for this spawn of the lower regions which respects no law I would apply a law which would at least bring a wholesome fear into their hearts. All traitors, they have from the first retarded and obstructed war preparations.

Several years ago I remember quite well that an orator of this brand talked for days on the street corners of my own city, denouncing our flag and abusing our Government. There was at that time no law which could reach him directly. I rejoice that we have here in this bill a provision which will enable the authorities at once to arrest these anarchists who trample on our flag and who would destroy our Constitution and our laws. I am quite willing, in fact I would be glad, to see this law made permanent and apply in peace as well as in war. There is no place in this country for this class of agitators who impudently attempt, as soon as they arrive in this country, to destroy the Government which has given them the privilege of coming within its borders, and I regret that there is not a provision in the bill for their deportation. I hope the provisions of this bill will be sternly and rigorously enforced.

So far, Mr. Speaker, I am entirely in accord with the bill. Indeed, I am in accord with all of it except the last section thereof, concerning which I shall make a few remarks. I agree with the gentleman who has preceded me that it is not a time to permit any interference with the activities of our Government, with its preparations for war, with the assembling of its forces; it is no time especially to permit the morale of our soldiers in any way to be affected by treasonable utterances or utterances that might discourage them in their gallant attempt to drive back forces of the enemy. Nor ought we at any time to permit our flag to be desecrated and our institutions abused; neither should we for a moment allow the I. W. W.'s and their ilk to go about the country preaching sedition and encouraging the destruction of property.

With all this I am in entire accord, and therefore I am quite ready to support the first part of the bill, although I am inclined to think in some respects it is not so specific as it ought to be. I would make it even more rigid, and especially more definite, in order to make it certain that there could be no escape from its provisions. But unfortunately, important as the bill is, it seems that it is necessary to so limit the time as to prevent any proper discussion of its features.

The last provision of the bill, to which I object, is that giving authority to the Postmaster General, upon evidence satisfactory to him, to prohibit the delivery of mail to any person or concern. I favor the preceding provisions of the bill because the question of the violation of those provisions must be determined by a court and by a jury and also upon evidence; but this last provision requires no evidence in any legal sense. Evidence that is satisfactory to the Postmaster General may, in fact, be no evidence whatever to a discerning lawyer or to a careful court. He may consider one thing evidence which no good lawyer in the whole country would believe to be proper evidence in the case.

Think of it! Here is a power given to the Postmaster General to entirely crush out some business because he may not agree with certain expressions, and may think in some way they violate the provisions contained in the first section of the bill. His views are to govern the whole thing, not the real facts, which are not to be considered by a court, not to be determined by the jury. It may not really be the law itself, but his opinion of the law, or, perchance, what he thinks ought to be the law. I am willing at all times to accept what the law is determined to be, but here is the Postmaster General—a lawyer perhaps; I do not know; he has his advisers, of course—given the power to determine what these sections mean, and he alone is to determine whether this last section is to be put in motion. It is said such powers have been given before. But, Mr. Speaker, that was only with reference to fraud orders. This provision covers all mail, and includes all forms of free discussion. By this section we put it in the power of the Postmaster General to say what we shall write, what we shall print, to intercept our private correspondence, to stop all protests against profiteering, all exposures of incompetence and inefficiency through the press. All these privileges so essential to the existence of a free government, whether in war or peace, are to be dependent on the whim of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Speaker, I have voiced, as best I can, in the few minutes allotted to me my objections to this latter clause. I shall not for that reason withhold my approval of the bill. When the administration comes in here and says that it must have certain things in order to carry on this war successfully, the responsibility must be upon it and not upon this House in this crisis of our affairs.

Has any necessity been shown for this closing provision? Gentlemen say that remittances may be made to newspapers that are carrying on a treasonable propaganda, but the Postmaster General has been given full authority under the bill which we passed before to not only exclude from the mails these newspapers or periodicals which are carrying on such a propaganda, but to institute prosecutions against them. He can do that, however, under that law only upon evidence. This gives him the power to take action without evidence, except as he himself may consider it such, and he alone is to be the judge, the court, and the jury. I can see no necessity for this section, yet so important do I deem the other provisions of the bill that I shall not on that account oppose the bill.

This provision, perhaps, in itself may not be so exercised as to interfere with the just rights and liberties of any person, but that defense could be made of any power given to any dictator or any despotic government. Why should these powers be given to the Postmaster General? For what purpose does he need them? He can extinguish these newspapers or periodicals at any time if they are guilty of treasonable conduct. This section, in my judgment, ought to be excluded, and if I thought there was any possibility of a motion to recommit to the conference committee being successful I should make it at this time.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, when the full moral courage, physical power, and financial resources of our Nation are being taxed to the utmost it is our duty to leave nothing undone which will protect our fighting forces and advance the flag. Anything which will hamper our soldiers and sailors, discourage their actions, bring discredit upon the Government, interfere with the production of war supplies, or encourage the enemy by word or deed should be prevented. The time has come when this country finds itself divided into two classes—those who are loyal and those who are not. [Applause.] There can be no middle ground. We applaud the former and by this bill will punish the latter, thereby bringing this war to a speedier victorious termination. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. Too long already has the country waited for the passage of this act. I hope I am not intolerant—I try not to be—and I believe I am not inclined to be too critical of others' opinions, but I am at a loss to know why it is, after we have voted to send our young men to war, some should feel so solicitous now about the civil rights of those who stay at home. Every time a measure is brought upon this floor that seeks to curb the soap-box orators and throttle the damnable German propaganda in this country they discover that some one's civil rights are violated and some one's supposed constitutional right to criticize and abuse and villify the Government that protects them and theirs is being abridged. I am frank to say that I have no patience with anyone who seems so willing to devote the lives of the young men of this country to the defense of liberty and so unwilling to forego any privilege that he may think he should enjoy of abusing our Government and the form of our Government. [Applause.] Neither am I at all concerned that the Postmaster General may be arbitrary in excluding from the mails certain publications that have been heretofore poisoning the very lifeblood of this country. All men are either loyal or disloyal. If loyal, they are willing to forego a doubtful right that liberty may live; if disloyal, they have no rights, except to be shot as traitors. As a fine illustration of how critical some people may be, a very distinguished lawyer on this floor, in discussing this measure a while ago, said that this was the most extravagant grant—that is not his exact language—that it is the most complete surrender of the rights of the American people to the arbitrary acts of a ministerial officer that has ever been permitted by Congress; and yet the very language of the bill of which he complained—that is, section 4—has been upon the statute books for nearly 28 years.

That very power was granted the Postmaster General to protect people from sharks who sought to take nothing from them except their money, primarily passed, if I recall, to kill a lottery that was being operated in one of the Southern States. It has been on the statute books for nearly 30 years. It has been reviewed by the courts at least twenty times, and yet this gentleman rose up in horror because we now in time of war are delegating to the Postmaster General power, not to stop people who are trying to collect money without giving its equivalent, but to stop people from bringing into disrepute the form of our government, from dishonoring the flag we follow, and from causing people to look with contempt on the uniform of our boys who fight for our national existence. And this gentleman said he could not stand for such a grant of power to a Cabinet officer at this time! I can. I have no fear of its abuse. I have no sympathy with those who are to fall victims of its enforcement.

When we voted for war we dedicated to sacrifice the finest body of young men the world ever knew. Shall we falter and hesitate now and make their sacrifice in vain? Shall we be more tender of the civil rights of the disloyal few whom this law will strangle than of the lifeblood of this gallant band of patriotic boys who are dying beyond the seas? I answer, No. If my house were afire and my family's lives were endangered, I would not stop to argue with the fire company as to the manner of extinguishing the flames; neither am I going to stop long to consider the imaginary rights of him who is neither willing to fight for the flag nor surrender a private right he may think he has that this country may live. [Applause.] I am willing for him to wait until the war is over and then we will argue about his particular case. [Applause.] When peace shall come again and liberty reign, when selfishness and greed for power no longer threaten the very life of civilization, when Germany has been forced to seek peace and renounce conquest, then the timid who now fear an abuse of power will thank God that others dared and won while they caviled and feared.

Why, I am willing, and have said so by my vote, to intrust the lives of all the boys in this land in President Wilson's keeping; aye, more than that—the very life and honor of my country; and, so help me God, I shall not now endanger all these for fear some malcontent, some disloyal person may feel the halter draw. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], a member of the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, after listening to some of the criticisms which are made upon this bill, I wish to say a few words justifying my signature to the conference report and explaining the views that have influenced my judgment. I listened with great interest to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], and his eloquent plea for human rights, but all that he claimed and sought to have accomplished can be done notwithstanding this bill. For instance, the language relating to the abuse of certain things, among others the Constitution of the United States and the form of government, forbids only abuse, and yet he says that the time of war is a period of reconstruction when the whole vital energies of the people are aroused, and then is the time when new birth of thought takes place and sometimes amendments are sought to be made. Why, we picture to the gentleman at this very moment an amendment to the Constitution of the United States going down to the States to be voted upon by the people. There is nothing in this law that would forbid an amendment being started on its way to-morrow or after this bill becomes a law, for the language here is intended simply to restrict and restrain those who would abuse or challenge our form of government or Constitution, not by way of justifiable criticism of anything that exists but simply as the word "abuse" indicates, for the purpose of maliciously affecting it in some manner. Surely in time of war such language as that ought to be prohibited and stamped out. [Applause.] When you look at this Senate amendment—for I assume the House was satisfied with the bill that it passed—as it passed the House and went to the Senate, therefore, we need not consider it now but take up simply the amendments which are offered. On page 2 the first amendment introduced by the Senate is in these words:

Or say or do anything except by way of bona fide and not disloyal advice to an investor or investors.

That refers to the sale of Government bonds. That was added to the language adopted by the House which prohibited the making of false statements or misrepresentations of those bonds. I see no objection to the senatorial amendment. It has the saving clause in it, that of honest "bona fide" advice. A man might very well be called upon to advise some individual citizen under certain circumstances that for other purposes he ought not to invest or change an investment even to put it into Government bonds. That would be what is called bona fide advice, something given in good faith and not with a disloyal motive or purpose. Now, the second amendment relates to the protection of the military and naval forces. We have in the House bill the language, "shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty." Surely these things ought to be proscribed. What is it the Senate does? They have added to it the additional words "or incite or attempt to incite." No objection surely can be made to the introduction of that amendment to punish an attempt. This language makes the effort to incite insubordination by word or act criminal.

Surely in time of war that ought to be punished. Now, the fourth paragraph, "or shall willfully obstruct," the House had it "the recruiting or enlistment of men in the service of the United States." The Senate has added, "or discourage or willfully attempt to obstruct or discourage." Every one of these acts must be willful acts with that intent. The Senate amendment merely enlarges the language of the House bill so as to include an "attempt."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. May I have just three minutes more? I would like to finish my reference to the amendments in their order.

Mr. WEBB. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Now, the fifth amendment refers to abuse of certain things. Efforts were made in certain quarters to enlarge this language, but restricted as the language is it ought to be in this bill; that is, abuse of the form of government of the United States, the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces, and the following portion of it relates to bringing them into contempt or ridicule. There can be no harm in making this abuse illegal in a time of war. It does not refer to nor forbid legitimate criticism. To willfully display the enemy's flag in time of war is forbidden. All of these things are matters which ought to be prohibited. The sixth was the senatorial amendment and was withdrawn. There may be a difference of opinion as to whether or not it ought to have remained in the bill. I would have liked for my part to have seen it there, but that has been withdrawn, and therefore will not be a part of the bill when enacted, and it leaves only the last amendment, the adding of the fourth section to article 12 of the act of June, 1917. This section relates to the Postmaster General, and with respect to that section your committee caused to be written into it the words "when the United States is at war." With that amendment the section provides that during the period of war, and war only, the Postmaster General may exercise this extraordinary power of preventing certain uses of the mails, but he can only do this upon evidence, and evidence is only required to be satisfactory to him, it is true, but it must be upon evidence that there has been a violation of the law which is being amended or of these amendments to that law. There must be evidence that the espionage and sedition law we are discussing has been violated.

Any lawyer will understand that if the Postmaster General should arbitrarily without evidence exclude from the mail, a court would compel him by mandamus to restore the use of the mail to the person whose letters and papers were thus excluded; but if there was some evidence of a violation the court would not revise his discretion or judgment. If there is evidence, even a scintilla, then the mail of the violator ought to be excluded and the Postmaster's judgment ought to stand. [Applause.] This summary power will meet the needs of a time of war, for if a seditious or disloyal use of the mail is being made we must stop the poison at once. It would be too late after propaganda was spread.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER].

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill, designed to stamp out sedition. The people of my district love our flag, respect the Constitution of our great country, and all American institutions are sacred to them. In this time of war they have the greatest confidence in their Government. They would rather have well-defined laws enforced in the courts, even though thought by some to be drastic, than to have loose laws which sometimes furnish a temptation for certain citizens to administer punishment without warrant of law or without appealing to the court. They do not fear the impartial enforcement of strict laws, but they deplore lawlessness of all kinds, even though done in the name of a good cause. I believe the passage of this law will have a decidedly unifying effect throughout the country. It will be a real protection to sincere, patriotic people, and it is hoped will discourage the pernicious activities of petty and selfish politicians.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has none to yield.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I want only one minute to refer to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] about the Constitution and his view of the necessity for remaking it. I am eternally opposed to having the Constitution made over along the lines of a Karl Marx book on socialism, and I am also opposed to making the Stars and Stripes into a red flag of revolution for the anarchists, or the Industrial Workers of the World, or the socialists, or anybody else in time of war or at any other time. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, after carefully listening to the criticisms that have been aimed at this bill and its provisions I am more than ever in favor of the bill. There was a time some months ago when I could find excuse and entertain a large toleration for some of the less intelligent and poorly informed citizens of this country who did not give whole-hearted support to our country's war program to defend the honor and integrity of our Nation. But that time has passed. The war has now progressed to that stage where no sane or reasonably intelligent citizen is justified in giving less than his full support to his country's cause in this war. As has already been well said, "There are no two sides now to the question of the justice and righteousness of our cause in the war." Every citizen in this country is to-day either for his country or against it. There is no middle ground. For the citizen who is really at heart for his country there is nothing in this bill, not one single provision in it, that will deprive him of any right or interfere in any way with his freedom of speech or action.

I was somewhat surprised at some of the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] in his criticism of this bill. The gentleman said that the existence of the I. W. W., an organization whose membership is notorious for its violations of State and Federal laws, an organization which openly defies the Constitution and the laws of this country, was justified under the law of compensation. The gentleman from New York further insinuated that there were men in business in the State represented by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] who ought to have that character of an organization fighting them and destroying their property. By his language he announced his approval of the existence of an organization of that kind in this country.

This bill, as I understand it, aims to stop and will stop much of the loose, lying, soap-box socialist and I. W. W. language that has been too generously tolerated in this country for a long time. It aims to prevent the wild, false, and defamatory statements against our country and our form of government that it has been customary for irresponsible I. W. W.'s and socialists who have gone about the country during the past few years to make. In these times, when the best blood of our country is being freely given to preserve the glorious institutions of free government handed down to us by the forefathers of the Republic, these selfish, lying demagogues should not be tolerated. They have no right to be permitted to carry their false harangues against this Government and against many of its most loyal citizens throughout the country during this time of war. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, a great portion of the legislation in peace times is to protect the right of property and persons and to prosecute wrongs against individuals. In times of war it may be found necessary, in order to protect the Government, to extend this power to the limit that it might seem to interfere with the individual. That is the situation to-day. Indeed, the necessities of Government compel a surrender of individual rights for the sake of the public. That is a very large portion of legislation in peace times. I would not think of voting for this measure as it is reported if we were not in war. But war places not so much the individual in jeopardy as the State. In such times our chief concern must be the Nation rather than the citizen, and therefore when the Nation is at war our protective laws should be to protect the Nation rather than to protect individuals in any particular pretended right they might have. If to protect the Nation demands a restriction of the rights of the citizens, we must do it. The minor right must give way to the larger. And for that reason I think this legislation is a rather striking object lesson in the Government's restraint upon individuals in order to secure the larger right of the Nation. And I have no doubt but what this restrictive legislation, if it will be abused, will result in precisely what legislation heretofore has resulted in.

For instance, the alien and sedition laws were, in my judgment, totally unjustified, because they came in time of peace and they were to punish individuals in the exercise of what they regarded their rights of criticism of officials for their public conduct. It was an attempt to quiet such freedom, and such outcry was created that it became an issue in a political campaign. The alien and sedition laws were followed by the formal declarations known as the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions, resolutions of the two States against such restrictive legislation as applied to individuals. The resolutions became the platform of States' rights. They went too far in the other direction. But you will note that the campaign of 1800 was carried on with the alien and sedition laws as the chief issues. The election following the year after their enactment was almost a complete disruption of the Federalist Party, that advocated them. This party had controlled the country the first 12 years of the Nation's constitutional life. But the third election, that of the year 1800, resulted in 73 electoral votes for Jefferson and 73 for Burr. This was the first occasion for the House of Representatives to choose the President. They chose Jefferson over Burr. They both happened to belong to the same party—the Anti-Federalist. But in 1804 Jefferson received 162 votes, and Pinckney, the Federalist candidate of the party that had fathered the alien and sedition laws, received but 14 electoral votes. In 1808 Madison received 122 votes and Pinckney but 47. In 1812 Madison received 128 votes and De Witt Clinton but 89, while in 1816 Monroe received 183 and King but 34. In 1820 the Federalist Party was totally destroyed, and Monroe was unanimously elected, receiving 231 votes, one lone vote out of the 232 being cast for John Quincy Adams just as a matter of open or empty honor. William Plumer, of New Hampshire, who voted for Adams, it is claimed, did so because he did not want a unanimous election to divert that honor from Washington. But the alien and sedition laws were passed in times of peace, that personal criticism might be forbidden and as protection against public attack, when there was no justification for such legislation. And I want to say to my colleagues here that I vote for this measure, which is in certain features greatly restrictive, because the Nation is in the midst of a staggering war, and we can not close our eyes to the imminent danger of the presence of enemies among this composite people of America. We must take steps to curtail these sympathizers of the central powers. If we do not put it in the power of the Nation to deal with those who obstruct the prosecution of the war, who seize upon this time to attack our institutions, these opponents of the Government, in an orderly, legal process, the people at large will take the law in their own hands, as has been done in times past. What we must avoid is giving occasion for the people of the Nation to go into a state of anarchy, when the people will take the law in their own hands. We are a Nation of law and order, distinctively so. That is why we can not tolerate anarchistic movements, directed against law and order. For that reason, protection against lawlessness and effective prosecution of the war in which we have been forced, I will vote for this measure, which will prosecute these people under the law rather than leave it to the methods that have been employed in some sections, and that all of us very much deplore. I do not entertain as much fear as some of my colleagues, or as I did when I first read the conference report. A careful reading of amendment 5, which was one of the objectionable items, removes some fear. The amendment is as follows:

And whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall wilfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite, provoke, or encourage resistance to the United States, or to promote the cause of its enemies, or shall wilfully display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall wilfully advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

It will be noted the offense is an attack upon (1) the form of our government, (2) the Constitution, (3) the military or naval forces, (4) the flag, and (5) the uniform; the purpose of the language to bring these, or any of them, into scorn, disrepute, or contempt; or to incite resistance to the Government or encourage our enemies by curtailing production of necessaries to win the war, and so forth. These offenses, if proved, are so heinous in a time of war that they should be punished, and while it appears to me there is law enough to do it, yet the Department of Justice does not think so, and I am therefore willing to give the power.

However, Mr. Speaker, I regret we can not induce an omission of the fourth section. It does seem to me that the Congress is not justified in giving to a partisan head such powers, capable of such abuse, as is couched in language as follows:

SEC. 4. The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or concern is using the mails in violation of any of the provisions of this act, instruct the postmaster at any post office at which mail is received addressed to such person or concern to return to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed all letters or other matter so addressed, with the words "Mail to this address undeliverable under espionage act" plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such letters or other matter so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the senders thereof under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of adopting this conference report. As a member of the conference committee I signed this report. I am, of course, in favor of it now. This bill amends the act approved June 15, 1917, generally known as the espionage act. The law as it now stands does not prohibit some things which should be prohibited. The chief controversy has been over Senate amendment No. 6, which provides that "whoever shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy," and so forth, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or by both.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said something along the very line of the thought that I have in mind. More and more every day the people of the United States are becoming more deeply interested in this war. Every hour that this war continues the people at home are taking a more active part in its prosecution. Every day the papers are filled with the reports of the boys who have made the supreme sacrifice and given up their lives, and as we go on this feeling of interest in this war grows deeper and deeper in the hearts of the people.

Now, then, it is evidently wrong for men at home, in view of this situation, to utter or write or publish sentiments that are disloyal, because they tend to disturb the peace, tend to encourage the people to take the law into their own hands and inflict summary punishment. In the interest of peace and good order at home, we ought not to permit these disloyal utterances to be made. But this is not all. These disloyal utterances promote division among our people at home, when every day unity of sentiment becomes more imperative. Every day there is greater demand that all our power and all our resources and all our strength shall be centered on winning this war. Therefore, acts that tend to divide our people, that encourage opposition to the prosecution of the war, should be prohibited.

Under this law no man who is a loyal, patriotic citizen will suffer. But suppose we admit that under it there is a possibility that some innocent man might suffer some inconvenience or be punished? That should not deter us from enacting this kind of a law. Because under every criminal law it is possible that an innocent man might be punished.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that if there is any considerable number of people who have these abusive sentiments in their hearts the passage of this law making it illegal to express those sentiments will convert those people into support or unite them with those who believe in the prosecution of the war?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly; this law will act like all other criminal laws. It will deter those men from uttering these disloyal sentiments. It will have an influence like any other law of Congress. It will say to all our citizens the time has come when there are but two classes—those who are for the Government and those who are against it, those who are upholding the hands of the boys in France and those who are attempting to discourage them.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is not attempting to argue that by legislation we can make men's hearts all right and make them loyal?

Mr. MORGAN. I believe that by legislation to some extent we can reform people. I believe that our criminal laws to some extent do reform people. But if a man does violate the law he must suffer the consequences of his act.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is right.

Mr. MORGAN. It has been asserted that this law restricts the liberty of the press and the freedom of speech. This is not true. It does not take away any right guaranteed by the Constitution. In times of peace, in the great liberality of the American people, we have permitted the abuse of the freedom of speech and the press. But we are now in war. We know not how long the struggle will last. We know not when a victorious peace will come. Neither do we know what sacrifices we must make. We do not know what this war will cost us in treasure and blood. We do not know how many of our brave soldiers and seamen must give their lives as an offering upon the altar of their country before victory shall come. But we do know that a great crisis confronts the Nation. We do know that it is our duty as legislators to enact laws which will strengthen the Government in the great task before us. We do know that we should contribute in every way possible to lighten the burdens of those at the front fighting our battles for us, and this is the object of this legislation. It will promote peace and orderly government at home. It will provide proper punishment for those who at heart are disloyal and who are trying to aid the enemy. It will strengthen the arms of those public officials whose duty it is to arrest, prosecute, and convict disloyal persons, whoever they may be.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] for giving me this time. I sat here listening to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], the Socialist, and I also listened to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] over here, men who criticized this bill, wiped their feet on it; and the gentleman from Iowa says, "I may vote for it—but if," and all that.

Why is it that a man wants to come and spit on a bill and endeavor to make the people believe it is horrible, when he knows that his people back home want him to vote for it? [Applause.] We did not expect anything better from the gentleman from New York. He went so far as to read an article from some Socialist or somebody who said that the people who do not own any property ought to rule the Government. In other words, he said that the Bolsheviki ought to be in control of the United States Government. God forbid that day! [Applause.] I believe all the people should have a hand in running this Republic. Here we are now in this great crisis, and this espionage act is brought up for the purpose of holding this Government together and preventing the anarchists, the Socialists, the Bolsheviki, the disloyal element, and the disturbers of peace and fomenters of sedition from coming along and hamstringing the President and the Congress in prosecuting this war to a successful and glorious victory. [Applause.] We all know that the man who at this stage of the war talks against this Government, who is traitor enough to utter sentiments against his Government and against our people in a way to sneer at the flag, is shooting and stabbing in the back the brave boys who have gone yonder in Flanders to go "over the top" to save the American Republic. [Applause.]

Is it possible that any man will talk against this sedition act and say that it should not be passed because it might deprive some man of an excuse or privilege to curse his Government, to abuse the Constitution, to spit on the flag, and to slap the soldier in the face? Is that the object of the gentlemen who talk against this, which is a mild bill? I am for a much stronger one than this. I want to curb these fellows who are disloyal in their hearts and whose sympathies are against this Government. I want to grab them by the collar, kick them into jail, and let them stay there until this war is over. And so far as the newspapers that the gentleman from Iowa is so anxious about, that the Postmaster General might stop from going through the mail, I say that whenever one of these disloyal papers comes to my desk I feel that it is something like a venomous snake, because I know it is carrying the poison of disloyalty and treason against the American Government to every reader of that paper. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am in hearty accord with all the provisions of this bill except section 4. I think the American Congress has been very patient and lenient with certain classes in the United States in not passing laws heretofore as drastic, if not more drastic, than the provisions of this bill. I do feel, however, that section 4 might have been changed and the change have added material strength to the bill, and it would then have been more satisfactory to the people throughout the country. I care not how good a man the Postmaster General may be, how equable a temper he may have, or how judicious he may be in the application of the law, he should not be clothed with the arbitrary power conferred by this section, whereby, without a hearing and without a formal charge, he may bring ruin upon a private individual and he may bring it upon a business concern. I do not believe in the law of the Chinese, which condemns and executes a man and then hears the evidence with reference to his guilt afterwards. That is the proposition contained in section 4. Suppose that there is a newspaper—I care not whether it be of my political faith or of some one else's political faith—that happens to give some expression which the Postmaster General in his mind may think affords evidence that that character of paper should not go through the mail; he can stop that paper instanter and bring ruin upon it, when after a hearing a court may decide that there was absolutely no warrant to authorize the action of the Postmaster General. It may be true, as has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if such action were taken the business concern might by writ of mandamus have its status restored; this, however, I very seriously doubt; but if so, the ruin has been wrought, the damage has been done, and in a case of that character it would be irreparable. There are plenty of ways whereby all the protection sought in this bill may be had under the existing law with reference to the prosecution of those who violate any provisions of this act or of any criminal statute. It does not take long to get a Federal court into action. It does not take long to prefer a charge; it does not take long in these times to have a hearing. So I think there is no necessity for this section 4. It can serve no good purpose. It can be made the instrument of great harm. It should be eliminated.

Mr. WEBB. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, war does not change the character of men, but it develops character; and when that development is toward treason, there should be a law to punish severely those who are not loyal to their country. I am not in favor of section 4. I will not, however, allow my prejudice to prevent me from supporting this measure. I have confidence in the President of the United States that he will not permit any autocratic power to be exercised by the Postmaster General, and if that official should use any Prussian despotism in his office, it would not be very long before there would be a vacancy in the Cabinet. I have confidence in the American people, that they will never elect a man President of the United States who will not be true and faithful to our Republic and Constitution. [Applause.] In time of war we must punish our enemies at home as well as those abroad. We are a peaceful Nation, but being forced into war we must not hesitate to adopt every science known to militarism, every act familiar to diplomacy, in order to win. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I think I have three minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. WEBB. During the time I have I want to say that all our Postmaster Generals have administered the law with reference to fraud orders justly and fairly. They have saved the country and the unsuspecting public millions upon millions of dollars. I have no doubt that the Postmaster General in this case, in trying to protect this country from vicious propaganda, from spies, from disloyal persons, will execute the power we give him in this bill with the same fairness and fidelity to public duty that he has exhibited heretofore. I have no fear in leaving this important matter in his hands. This conference report was agreed to by the five conferees on the part of the House and by the five conferees on the part of the Senate. The conference report has passed the Senate by an overwhelming vote and I trust that that same overwhelming vote may be cast in favor of the conference report in this body.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do not the officials in whose hands is placed the responsibility of administering the existing law upon this subject say that they need this further amendment in order more effectually to prosecute the people who are indulging in these practices?

Mr. WEBB. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, because I want to extend my remarks by putting in the RECORD a letter from Gen. Lamar, showing the great importance of giving the Post Office Department this power so as to help this Government root out and destroy disloyalty and vicious propaganda.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would it not be too late after the issue of the paper or publication to call a jury to determine whether or not it was seditious?

Mr. WEBB. That is a rather slow process in times like these.

The letter I wish to insert from Mr. Lamar, Solicitor of the Post Office Department, is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 4, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KING: I read in the RECORD this morning the speeches in the Senate of yesterday and your remarks in the course of the debate.

The language of section 4 under discussion is identical with that of the fraud statute, and it is impossible to make any distinction between the practical operation of the two measures. The fraud statute itself does not provide for a hearing, nor does it provide that a fraud order shall only be issued against persons who have been convicted of the fraud, as one might assume from the remarks of Senators.

The Postmaster General would at the present time have as much power to issue fraud orders against newspapers for political purposes or in order to accomplish any of the purposes suggested by Senators in furtherance of political interests under the existing fraud statute as he would have to issue orders for the return of such mail under section 4 of the bill. The fraud statute itself does not even provide for a hearing. As a matter of practice and in order to administer absolute justice, full hearings are held in fraud cases; that is, where conclusive evidence of the fraud does not appear upon the face of the papers before the department. This practice would undoubtedly be extended to cover seditious cases, but in the latter class much of the illegal matter under the espionage act would appear on the very face of the literature being circulated, which would make a hearing unnecessary in some cases. In fact, the public interests might seriously suffer by permitting the continued use of the mails to one sending literature manifestly in violation of the espionage act pending such hearing.

Nor does the analogy between the fraud statute and the proposed law stop at what has been said. The fraud statute does not provide in terms for a review by the courts, but it is settled law that the equity courts have jurisdiction to restrain orders of the Postmaster General where they are issued contrary to law or where for any reason it appears the Postmaster General has acted in an arbitrary or capricious manner.

This is a war measure and is intended to prevent this great governmental instrumentality—the mails—from being used against the interest of the Government in the prosecution of this war. The equity courts would have the same jurisdiction to restrain improper orders of the Postmaster General under section 4 of this proposed bill that they now have under the fraud statute. If the Postmaster General should attempt to use this power for other purposes, political or otherwise, such as has been suggested in the course of the debate, he would not only violate the law himself, a remedy for which would immediately be available in injunction proceedings, but make himself the object of ridicule and contempt of the American people, with the result that instead of accomplishing any political advantage such action would be a political boomerang.

There is a further analogy between this class of legislation and fraud legislation. Not only has Congress provided for the issuance of fraud orders by the Post Office Department, upon evidence satisfactory to the Postmaster General, but, as in the matter under consideration, there is a companion criminal statute making it a penal offense to use the mails for fraudulent purposes. The delays incident and the technicalities resorted to in criminal proceedings have demonstrated beyond any doubt that the preventive measure employed by the Post Office Department is infinitely more effective in preventing frauds than the criminal provision. The fact is that the action of the Post Office Department in detecting frauds has furnished the information upon which criminal prosecutions have followed.

The recent case of The Masses Publishing Co., where the magazine has been barred from the mails since last July, and where the courts have sustained the action of the department, but where the criminal proceedings are still pending after one mistrial, is an example of the relative efficiency of the two methods in handling seditious matter. The Masses case is merely typical. In many such cases it takes years to bring offenders to trial in fraud cases.

Much of the seditious matter that is now being circulated is distributed by persons or concerns throughout the country in circular form and is accompanied by urgent solicitations for funds to continue the propaganda work, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are being sent through the mails to the distributors of such literature. The proposed section 4 would enable the Post Office Department to promptly reach and suppress this evil. The propagandists now engaged in this work in most cases are willing to serve prison sentences if they are only permitted to conduct the propaganda. They are largely of a class who have nothing to lose by a prison sentence, and, in fact such sentence simply brings the martyrdom they seek in the eyes of those whom they endeavor to mislead.

I may add, in conclusion, that the practice in the department in all cases where fraud orders or similar orders of the Postmaster General are made is that a finding of the facts before the department is made up by the solicitor for the department and form a part of the record of the case and are made a part of the order of the Postmaster General, all of which are available to the interested parties for use in the courts or otherwise.

The theory underlying fraud, lottery, and other similar statutes is that the matter prevented from being carried in the mails is against public policy. If the practice of a fraud which only affects a few individuals is against public policy, how much more against public policy is the circulation of matter which in time of war strikes at the very heart of the Republic? And why should not all use of the mails be prohibited to one engaged in such undertaking?

Very truly, yours,

W. H. LAMAR, Solicitor.

By unanimous consent Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania, Mr. VOIGT, Mr. COX, and Mr. WALTON were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] yield?

Mr. WEBB. I yield for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may avoid the possibility of a motion to recommit on the Postmaster General paragraph in section 4. That section confers on the Postmaster General judicial or arbitrary power?

Mr. WEBB. The same powers that were conferred upon him 15 and 20 years ago in reference to fraudulent enterprises.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But in those cases the offender had an opportunity in the regular way to be tried by a court and jury and to defend himself.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; and he will have the same rights under this provision.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In section 4 there is no such provision, and if it should affect a man's business or threaten to put him out of business, he has no place to go except to the Postmaster General.

Mr. WEBB. We have not given him the power to put him out of business, but only to stop his mail and return it to the sender. There is no penalty attached to it, and if he thinks he is unjustly dealt with he can go into court at once.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from North Carolina has given a good deal of thought to this. Does he now state that there are no new powers here conferred upon the Postmaster General by section 4?

Mr. WEBB. I would not say that; the additional power is conferred upon him to stop mail matter being delivered to a person violating this act. He now has the power to keep such person from sending matter in violation of this act through the mails, and we propose to give him power to stop such person from receiving mail to carry on his dangerous propaganda.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was being taken when Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. WEBB demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from North Carolina demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 293, nays 1, answered "present" 2, not voting 134, as follows:

FOOD-PRODUCTION BILL.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and that it be made the continuing order, not to interfere with appropriation bills, conference reports, and privileged matters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11945, and that it be made the continuing order, not to interfere with conference reports, appropriation bills, or privileged matters. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, what about Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. It can not interfere with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. GILLETT. Does that mean to bring it up now?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. What is the bill, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 273), there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums for the purposes indicated:

First. For the prevention, control, and eradication of the diseases and pests of live stock, the enlargement of live-stock production, and the conservation and utilization of meat, poultry, dairy, and other animal products $1,058,975.

Second. For procuring, storing, and furnishing seeds, as authorized by section 3 of the act, the appropriations for said purposes of $2,500,000 in section 8 of the act and $4,000,000 under the heading "Department of Agriculture" in the act approved March 28, 1918, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes," shall be available until the date when said act of August 10, 1917, shall cease to be in effect, and any moneys heretofore or hereafter received by the United States for furnishing such seeds may be used as a revolving fund until said date.

Third. For the prevention, control, and eradication of insects and plant diseases injurious to agriculture, and the conservation and utilization of plant products, $811,300.

Fourth. For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods, through county, district, and urban agents and others, $6,100,000.

Fifth. For gathering authoritative information in connection with the demand for, and the production, supply, distribution, and utilization of food, and otherwise carrying out the purposes of section 2 of the act; extending and enlarging the market news service; and preventing waste of food in storage, in transit, or held for sale; advise concerning the market movement or distribution of perishable products; for enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect and certify perishable agricultural products, as provided in the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $2,136,028.

Sixth. For miscellaneous items, including the salaries of assistant secretaries appointed under the act approved August 10, 1917; special work in crop estimating; aiding agencies in the various States in supplying farm labor; enlarging the informational work of the Department of Agriculture; and printing and distributing emergency leaflets, posters, and other publications requiring quick issue or large editions, $1,105,980, of which sum not exceeding $25,000 shall be available for rent in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, for the official purposes of the Department of Agriculture, and within the limits of the appropriations for rent may by this or any other act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, to requisition the use of, and take possession of, any building or any space in any building, and the appurtenances thereof, in the District of Columbia, other than a dwelling house occupied as such or a building occupied by any other branch of the United States Government; and he shall ascertain and pay just compensation for such use. If the amount of compensation so ascertained be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of such amount, and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation for such use in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

Seventh. For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for and secure the voluntary mobilization and distribution of farm labor for the production and harvesting of agricultural crops, and to advance railroad fares and other actual traveling expenses for the transportation of such labor, upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, $500,000, available immediately, of which not exceeding $50,000 may be expended for the payment of such administrative expenses, including such rent, the expenses of such printing and publications, the purchase of such supplies and equipment, and the employment of such persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary for the purposes of this item. Any money received by the United States in repayment of advances made under this item may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this item; any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. In carrying out the purposes of this item the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the Secretary of Labor or any other Federal, State, county or municipal department, agency, or officer, or with any association of farmers, board of trade, chamber of commerce, or similar organization, or with any person. Agricultural labor actually employed in agriculture and needed for cultivating and harvesting crops where engaged shall not be mobilized nor transported under the provisions of this item, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar year 1918, cause to be made to the Congress a detailed statement showing as far as possible the number of persons transported and employed and a detailed statement of all disbursements under this item.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if it is the purpose to set aside all other legislation except appropriation bills and conference reports by this bill?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is the intention to give this bill a privileged status, with the right to go ahead, with the exception of conference reports and appropriation bills.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the reason I ask is this: There has been a pressing demand on the Committee on Rules for some weeks for a rule giving consideration to a bill establishing a heavy duck factory in the Atlanta penitentiary. The President has been urging action on this bill, and the committee agreed to a rule this morning. It was my understanding that that rule would be called up to-day immediately after the consideration of the conference report on the espionage bill.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not think this bill will take more than a day, and I had some intimation in reference to the other bill, and I understood it might possibly be called up, but inasmuch as it was not, this being next in order, I made my request.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is so important a measure that if it is to be given a privileged status I think somebody ought to take the responsibility for it, and I suggest that the Committee on Rules be charged with that responsibility. Therefore I object to the request made by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that.

MANUFACTURE OF GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES AT ATLANTA (GA.) PENITENTIARY.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report (No. 544) from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

House resolution 335.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8938; that there shall be not exceeding one hour of general debate, to be equally divided between those supporting and those opposing the bill, which debate shall be confined to the said bill, at the end of which time the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and at the conclusion of such reading the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, together with the amendments, if any, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be opportunity for 20 minutes' debate on a side I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the consideration of a bill introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and provides, among other things, for the establishment of a cotton factory in the Atlanta Penitentiary. The prime purpose in the establishment of such factory is to augment the production of heavy duck, which is seriously needed by the Army.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. How much additional duck will the establishment of this factory add to the supply that already exists?

Mr. POU. Now, I could not answer that question. I will say very frankly to the gentleman. There has been, as I am informed, a very great scarcity of that much-needed commodity. With this explanation of the necessity of the rule, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes it possible to consider legislation that appropriates $650,000 for the building of a cotton-textile plant in connection with the Atlanta Penitentiary, and also $350,000 for working capital; or, in other words, it is a proposition to levy a tax of a cool million dollars on the business interests of this country that to-day are uncomplainingly and loyally bearing all the burdens of taxation that we have placed upon them, for the simple purpose of establishing Federal convict labor under Government control in opposition to honest labor and legitimate private business. This bill presents two propositions. The first proposition, as I understand, put in by the Committee on the Judiciary, provides for the employment of this labor in agricultural pursuits or in the growing of food products. The second provision is the $650,000 provision for buying machinery for a cotton-textile plant in connection with the Federal prison at Atlanta, and the $350,000 revolving fund. This bill is asked for for three distinct reasons, as I understand it from the reading of the report from the Committee on the Judiciary. First, it is asked on the ground it is humanitarian; second, that the Government needs the goods, and that the available supply by private enterprises is not sufficient; third, that the work is shown to be profitable to private enterprise, and under proper management should be profitable to the Government. The first provision of this bill for employing these convicts in the production of food products I am entirely in favor of at this time. If there is one thing we need at this time, according to the speeches and statements made each day by the President and Mr. Hoover, it is to increase the supply of food products, and this body has already made large appropriations to help get the labor to do it with and yet do not know where to find it. If after one year of this war we have been obliged to observe heatless days, meatless days, and wheatless days——

Mr. MADDEN. And senseless days.

Mr. SNELL. Perhaps senseless days should be included. It is certainly proper at this time that if we have any unemployed labor that it should be put to raising food products that are impossible for us to get in sufficient quantities to supply ourselves and our allies under present conditions, and by so employing this convict labor you will not in any way interfere with any legitimate industry. Also by doing this it will not be necessary to place additional taxes on our people at this time in order to get the full benefit of their labor, as it would cost very little to start operations along this line. Furthermore, by putting these men to raising food products we will get the benefit of their labor in time to be of some help in winning this war, while I doubt if you can if we start building a textile plant. As far as I am able to learn, the people who have given most attention and study of prison life and the care and healthfulness of the men in the great prisons of our country are nearly unanimous in the opinion that the employment of prisoners in agricultural pursuits or in the raising of food products is the best possible way of employing them, both from the standpoint of the country at large and the prisoners themselves.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know how many times this proposition of establishing an industrial plant at the Atlanta penitentiary has been before the Congress?

Mr. SNELL. I understand it has been before the Congress for 10 or 12 years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And has been rejected in each instance?

Mr. SNELL. I understand so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because it proposed to compete with outside industrial establishments?

Mr. SNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman has just said that all those who have made a study of this question are unanimous?

Mr. SNELL. I understand so, or nearly so.

Mr. KEATING. Has the gentleman any authority for that statement?

Mr. SNELL. No, sir; only that is as I understand it.

Mr. KEATING. I think the gentleman will find it necessary to revise his remark if he wants to be entirely accurate, because I think he will find a very large majority of those who have given study to the question are in favor of such a measure as this, only a broader one if anything.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that is so, does the gentleman know whether any effort has been made by the Rules Committee or any other committee to install furniture-making machinery in the Leavenworth penitentiary?

Mr. SNELL. That was before us last year, the same time we last considered this Atlanta proposition, but nothing has been said about it this year, so far as I know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has any suggestion been made that the Government should approve a plan for manufacturing machinery at Leavenworth or at any other penitentiary?

Mr. SNELL. Not at the present time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So we are confined for the present to this proposition of manufacturing cotton duck at the Atlanta Penitentiary?

Mr. SNELL. So far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any information as to how long it will take to install that machinery?

Mr. SNELL. I am coming to that.

The second provision provides for an expenditure of $650,000 for the purchase of machinery and other equipment to carry out the purposes of this act.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. SNELL. As far as I am able to learn it will be practically impossible to get this machinery in any reasonable length of time or in time to be of any benefit during the present war unless it lasts longer than I hope it will. We know the position of the manufacturers of machinery throughout the country, and it seems to me it would be better at this time that they should spend their efforts in manufacturing machinery that is absolutely necessary to carry out the purposes of the war and help to win the war, such as the manufacture of munitions, ordnance, and things of that kind, rather than to manufacture cotton machinery that is going to be put in competition with legitimate business in the country, when, as I understand, there are many private concerns that are looking for these orders at the present time.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman any information as to whether or not the existing plants for manufacturing cotton duck are adequate to the needs of the country?

Mr. SNELL. I saw a copy of a letter that was written to the Quartermaster General on January 5, 1918, by one of the largest textile manufacturing concerns in New England, which said that this company was in a position to manufacture 5,000 yards weekly of cotton duck for the Government. They said that they had arrangements made for the cotton yarn, but did not dare to buy it on account of the high price unless the Government would give them the order for the cotton duck, and that it was highly important to get an early reply from the Government.

This same company wrote to the Quartermaster General two letters in the month of April, and up to last Wednesday they had not received any reply from the Quartermaster Department relative to the questions they asked. If the Government is so short it would seem to me only proper that it should investigate some of the private sources of supply before we lay an extra tax on our people in order to establish a Government industry to compete with those private companies who need the business, pay the taxes, buy your bonds, and in every way support your Government in this hour of its urgent need.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman any information as to the embargo that is being placed on the introduction of new machinery into new manufacturing enterprises by private individuals, through the priority board?

Mr. SNELL. Yes, sir; I understand that is so, but have no definite information about it.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman had that information he would understand that no person would be permitted to establish a new enterprise, and why should the Government be permitted to do so?

Mr. SNELL. I can not see any reason why it should be allowed to do so, nor can I see any reason why we should adopt this as a war measure. It seems to me if there are private industries in this country that are willing to take orders from the Government for the manufacture of cotton duck, and I am assured there are, they certainly should give the orders to them rather than to build up a Government enterprise to compete with them. And I hope it will not be the judgment of this House to do it at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I see that the bill was reported by the Judiciary Committee, and the report is rather lengthy. I would like to inquire whether there were any hearings had before that committee?

Mr. SNELL. I can not tell you, so far as that is concerned. The only evidence that was brought before the Rules Committee was the letter from the President requesting its adoption as a war emergency.

Mr. PLATT. Is not this like the bill H. R. 9683, which was reported from the Committee on Labor? It seems to be along the same line of prison-made war material.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And let me supplement my statement by saying that it excludes nearly every other Federal penitentiary and prisoner in the United States from that same industry.

Mr. SNELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Government has all the activities on hand at the present time that it can consistently attend to, and that at present it is no time to consider building a textile plant in connection with any prison. After this war is over you can build it for less than one-half of the expense that it would cost now and, furthermore, we need the money and labor for more important work.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on agreeing to the rule.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. POU. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes, 50, noes 49.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 3132. An act to amend the naturalization laws and to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States and other laws relating to naturalization, and for other purposes.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 8, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

In the plenitude of Thy mercy, O Lord, look upon us and give us courage to meet the trials that confront us. Give us grace to overcome the difficulties of the way. Give us faith to remove mountains. May we look away from ourselves, and from the regretted past, and look steadfastly to Thee for the present and for the future. Forgetting the things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, may we press forward with all diligence toward the mark set up for our attainment; and may we be true to Thee and to the cause which Thou hast committed to our hands. May there be no cessation in our effort until our purpose has been accomplished and victory has been achieved. May we look to our great Leader who breaketh the bow and cutteth the spear asunder; who maketh wars to cease to the ends of the earth. May this conquering Lord, the Lord of Hosts, be with us, and may the God of Jacob be our refuge. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Daughters of the American Revolution, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION,
MEMORIAL CONTINENTAL HALL,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MARSHALL: I am inclosing copies of two resolutions adopted by the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, at their Twenty-seventh Continental Congress recently held in this city.

Very sincerely, yours, EMMA L. CROWELL,
Recording Secretary General.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
United States Senate.

MAY 7, 1918.

[Resolution adopted at the Twenty-seventh Continental Congress, National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution.]

Whereas the German Kaiser has financed newspapers in the United States to conduct a propaganda favorable to the nefarious schemes of Germany; has systematically stirred up anti-American sentiment in Mexico; has used the leaders of the German-American Alliance to influence that powerful organization againt the interests of our people; has, by bribing public officials, sought to corrupt public opinion and spread sedition amongst us; and

Whereas the Kaiser has openly boasted that there are in the United States 20,000,000 German subjects who are still loyal to the German Crown and the fatherland; and

Whereas in school communities where Germans control the schools the German language is being taught exclusively or is given preference, and German newspapers are keeping alive the spirit of fidelity to German autocracy, resulting in weakening our national spirit, fostering a hostile propaganda, and undermining the patriotism of the American people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we call upon the President and the Congress and legislatures of the several States to enact such laws as may be necessary to prohibit the publication and circulation of any periodicals in the language of the various countries with which we are at war and to prohibit the teaching of any such languages in the primary grades of our schools, and to require all public records and notices to be written in the English language.

[Resolution adopted at the Twenty-seventh Continental Congress, National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution.]

Whereas two German prisoners confined at Fort McPherson, at Atlanta, Ga., died recently and were interred in the National Cemetery at Marietta, Ga., and the funeral services were conducted with much pomp and display; and

Whereas the Germans were wrapped in the flag of their country and a salute was fired over the graves by American soldiers; and

Whereas the national cemeteries of the United States are reserved for the burial of the soldiers and sailors of America, it is not, in our opinion, proper or fit that the resting place provided for our heroic dead should be used to bury the enemies of our country, and especially our German foes, who have displayed so great disregard for human rights and have visited upon innocent women and children such gross and brutal atrocities; and

Whereas public demonstration made over the graves of the enemies of America is not a fit and proper object lesson for loyal American citizens, and especially as the firing of salutes by American soldiers over such graves tends to hold up to the world that the Germans are heroes; and

Whereas since Christianity demands that these prisoners be given decent burial in some place distinct from that of our national cemeteries: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Daughters of the American Revolution in congress assembled in Washington, D. C., protest against the use of the national cemeteries of America for the burial of alien enemies, particularly Germans, and they hereby strongly urge the United States Government that such practice be discontinued, and that all customary military honors on such occasions be eliminated. Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished to the President of the United States and the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

CONSTRUCTION OF CONCRETE SHIPS (S. DOC. NO. 222).

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there was laid upon our desks yesterday a report by Benjamin A. Howes on the construction of concrete ships. As this report has been sent around here, I presume, for a purpose, I ask that the report of Mr. R. J. Wigg, chief engineer, Department of Concrete Ship Construction; the report of Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, to the Secretary of the Treasury; the approval of the President of the United States; and the description of the concrete ships as designed by the Shipping Board may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9093) to amend the act approved September 8, 1916, chapter 470, Statutes at Large, Sixty-fourth Congress, relating to pensions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I send to the desk the petition of Motlows Creek Democratic Club, of Spartanburg County, S. C., which I should like to have go into the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOTLOWS CREEK DEMOCRATIC CLUB,
Spartanburg County, April 27, 1918.

Resolutions adopted by club.

Whereas our Nation is now at war with the greatest military forces ever assembled, and great destruction of life and property is felt by every country engaged, and actual starvation is facing a great number of people because of scarcity of food: Therefore be it

Resolved, first, That Motlows Creek Democratic Club, now in session places itself on record indorsing President Woodrow Wilson and his administration for its able management of the affairs of our Government during this war; and

Resolved, second, That we ask our Representative in Congress, Hon. SAMUEL J. NICHOLLS, Senators TILLMAN and SMITH, with South Carolina's other Representatives, to advocate and insist upon the prohibition of all grains and fuel used in the manufacturing of all beers, whisky, or other beverage whatever not necessary to health and sustenance of life for the duration of this war.

S. D. GIBSON, President.
S. B. LOFTIS, Secretary.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Women's Service Association, of San Francisco, Cal., praying for enactment of legislation giving additional power to the Food Administration in the handling of hotels, restaurants, and the personal control of food, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented a petition of sundry citizens of the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth congressional districts of New York State, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11364) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 430) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 433) thereon.

CASTLE PEAK IRRIGATION PROJECT, UTAH.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4244) for the relief of entrymen within the Castle Peak irrigation project in Utah, and I submit a report (No. 432) thereon. As it is an emergency matter and a very short bill I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to hear the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any qualified entryman who has heretofore made bona fide entry upon land subsequently withdrawn under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 388), for the Castle Peak irrigation project, in Utah, upon filing an application to have his entry made subject to all the charges, terms, conditions, provisions, and limitations of the reclamation act, together with a satisfactory showing of full compliance with the homestead laws under which such entry was made to the date of such application, may be granted leave of absence from the land until the Secretary of the Interior announces the availability of a water supply for the irrigation of the land, or until the lands embraced in his entry shall be restored to the public domain: Provided, That the period of actual absence under this act shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection I ask that a letter from the Interior Department to Hon. HENRY L. MYERS, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 27, 1918.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Chairman Senate Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter dated April 4, 1918, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 4244, I have the honor to report as follows:

A large tract of land in the State of Utah, which was formerly embraced in Utah applications for withdrawals, list No. 6, under the act of March 15, 1910 (36 Stat., 237), was restored to the public domain on June 29, 1917. Thereupon a number of homesteaders, about 60 in all, made homestead entries upon portions of the land restored with a view of constructing a private reclamation project when the future development of that region and the number of settlers would warrant such action. Subsequently, however, or on November 20, 1917, upon the recommendation of the United States Reclamation Service, the land was again withdrawn from entry under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), for the purpose of constructing what is to be known as the Castle Peak irrigation project, as this is at present considered a feasible project. Therefore further entry of the land can not be made until it has been restored to entry either under the provisions of the reclamation laws or the general public land laws, and it would be futile for the few entrymen who have already made entry within the limits of the project to attempt to construct their own system of irrigation.

To require these settlers to live upon and cultivate their land while there is no water available for irrigation would impose a hardship upon them which Senate bill 4244 would relieve, and it is therefore respectfully recommended that the proposed legislation be enacted into law.

Cordially, yours,

ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

ENTRY INTO AND DEPARTURE FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 10264) to prevent in time of war departure from or entry into the United States contrary to the public safety, and I submit a report (No. 431) thereon. This is a very important bill, and may be regarded as a supplement to the espionage acts. I ask that the bill be read, and after the Senate has heard it I will ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. This bill was passed by the House last week. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and there fully considered. At a special session yesterday the committee recommended its passage with amendments. I have made the report this morning. It is an emergency measure and was passed by the House as such and without a roll call. The object of it is to control the entrance and departure of all persons in or from their territory. It is a war measure and in line with legislation that has been enacted by all the nations engaged in the war.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator if this was a unanimous report by the committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. It was.

Mr. SMOOT. It is rather a far-reaching measure, and there are but few Senators present. I have not had time to read the bill. I have tried to gather its import from the reading at the desk at this moment. May I ask the Senator if the substance of the bill is not this, that it authorizes the President of the United States to prevent anybody from leaving the United States or to prevent anybody from coming into the United States he may see fit?

Mr. SHIELDS. I will state the substance of the bill in a little more orderly way, if the Senator desires, and a little more elaborately.

The first section of the bill prohibits aliens from either departing from or entering the United States except with passports and under certain rules and regulations to be prescribed by the President, when required for the public safety.

There are several subsections that are merely supplementary to that provision to punish evasions of it in various ways. The second section of the bill——

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SHIELDS. In a moment. The second section prohibits citizens of the United States from departing from or entering the United States without a passport and under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

The chief object of the bill is to correct a very serious trouble which the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Labor are having with aliens and alien enemies and renegade American citizens, I am sorry to say, entering the United States from nests they have in Cuba and over the Mexican border. They can now enter and depart without any power of the departments or of the Government to intercept or delay them. There is no law that covers this case. It is believed that all the information which goes to Germany of the war preparations of the United States and of the transportation of troops to France passes through Mexico. The Government is having a great deal of trouble along that border. It is an everyday occurrence, and the emergency of this measure is very great. The bill is supplementary to the espionage laws and necessary for their efficient execution in detecting and punishing German spies.

The departments have communicated to both Houses and asked that the bill be enacted into law as speedily as possible in order that they may remedy the serious evils and troubles I have just stated. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the Senator, if I understood him correctly, as I think I did, that the provisions of the bill include citizens of this country; that it does not distinguish between alien enemies and aliens of neutral countries. Does the Senator think it is a wise provision not to make a distinction between alien enemies and aliens who may be citizens of a neutral country?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do think it wise not to make any distinction. There is no distinction under section 1, and includes all aliens, whether they be alien enemies or neutrals, but there is a distinction between that section and section 2 which applies only to our citizens. The wisdom of including everyone is that these emissaries or spies of the German Empire are seldom Germans. One can readily see that our enemies would prefer to use a renegade American or some other national rather than one belonging to the German Empire in order to escape detection, and the only way possible to suppress the stream of information that is now going out from the United States about our military preparations through Mexico and through Cuba is to put this interdiction upon all people, as is done in the bill.

Another object is to reach the agents of the Germans who come or attempt to come into the United States to stir up sedition, resistance to the laws passed for the conduct of the war, and treasonable conspiracies.

I will say to the Senator that I am informed every one of the belligerent countries have passed similar laws to this, and they did it immediately after the declaration of war. I suppose their prompt action was on account of their greater familiarity with wars and the difficulties of this character which follow them, and also because of their proximity.

Mr. GRONNA. I can assure the Senator I am just as anxious as anyone to pass legislation that will keep out these alien enemies, but I can readily see that it would lead to a great deal of work for the departments. Only this morning I had a letter from one of my constituents in North Dakota. I happen to know the man. I know that he is a citizen of the United States, and he was asking me if there was any law prohibiting a citizen of the United States from going to Canada to take homestead land. Of course I wrote to him that there are no such statutes at the present time; but with the passage of this bill every one of these citizens would have to apply for a passport, would he not, before he could depart from this country?

Mr. SHIELDS. Not necessarily. The President can make such rules and regulations governing that situation as will prevent any inconvenience whatever to citizens of the United States.

We need no ironclad rule as to Canada, so far as spies are concerned—that is evident to everyone—as that country is one of our allies. The very question which the Senator from North Dakota has raised was debated very elaborately in the other House, and the fact that several railroads run partly through Canada was referred to. Senators from the Western States along the Canadian line speak of railroads there that run in and out of the two countries and ask whether or not passports would be necessary. I am assured that most liberal rules to obviate any inconvenience to our own people, as well as to our allies, will be prescribed, so that the intercourse between the countries will go on conveniently, as at present. The Senator from North Dakota has counterstated that no passports are required for anyone going from this country to Canada or coming from Canada into the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. I raised this question because I live very close to the Canadian line.

Mr. SHIELDS. I can appreciate the Senator's interest.

Mr. GRONNA. There is a great deal of commerce and a great deal of travel between the two countries. Canadians cross the line into the United States and the citizens of the United States cross the line into Canada. There is a great deal of business going on at all times and, of course, I do not wish to see this trade and this commerce hampered, because I believe it to be beneficial to both countries. A great deal of labor may go across the line at certain times from the United States to Canada, and Canada needs that labor. On the other hand, earlier in the season laboring men will come from Canada into the United States, and the United States needs that labor. I sincerely hope that we shall not pass a law that will hamper or prohibit this traffic or this business.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will say to the Senator that that was all fully considered, especially in the other House and in the departments. The rules to be prescribed will make the entrance and the exit of the nationals of the two countries entirely convenient and easy, so far as consistent with the public safety. There may be some inconvenience naturally arising out of rules and regulations of this character; but we all have got to submit to something of that kind in time of war. It would be difficult for us to draw a distinction between the Canadian territories and Mexican territory, we being supposed to be at peace with Mexico.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to refer to the same matter which has been mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], because our people are very much interested in this matter, especially in connection with the trade with Canada. Many of our most important cities are very near to the border and near to large cities in Canada, and they have much business there. As I understand, the Senator from Tennessee assures us that that trade and business and intercourse between this country and Canada will be interfered with just as little as possible and just as little as may be deemed necessary to the proper protection of the interests of this country, taking into account the fact that Canada and her citizens are interested on the same side of this controversy as we are interested.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am satisfied that will be done. That matter has been thoroughly considered by both the Department of Justice and the Department of State, which departments, of course, will be consulted more than the other departments, about making these rules, and they will be as liberal as possible consistent with the protection of the interest of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Do the committee and the department think it would be very unwise to exclude the Canadian line from the operation of this act?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes. The law to be effective must apply to all persons.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator from Tennessee another question. Would there be anything in this proposed act that would require a citizen going from the State of Washington to Alaska to secure a passport?

Mr. SHIELDS. I think not. There is a provision in the bill—I believe it is in the fourth section—on that subject, which amply protects the right to go from one part of the United States, either continental or insular, to another.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Without securing a passport?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I noticed the reading of the bill as closely as I could, and that was my conclusion.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator from Washington will remember that I had some discussion with him on that very subject yesterday. For the time being, my mind did not recall this provision; but I immediately examined the bill, and then thought it was ample to meet that very contingency.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion?

Mr. SHIELDS. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. This Canadian matter, as I view it, is of a great deal of consequence. Unless some friendly arrangement can be made it will disrupt the labor interests of New England absolutely. We not only trade with Canada and have great lines of railroad running from New England into Canada, but we are dependent in our mills, in our brickyards, and in our lumbering operations to a very great extent upon labor that comes from Canada. I wish we might in some way have a clearer assurance—a more distinct assurance—that if we vote for this bill, as we all want to vote for it on general principles, that matter can be so adjusted as not to disrupt our relations with Canada either as to trade or as to the question of labor.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the Department of State, from which the bill really comes, has considered all those matters thoroughly and is confident that such regulations can be made as will not unreasonably interrupt the lawful intercourse between the two countries as it now exists.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust that can be done.

Mr. SHIELDS. Otherwise, it would be as deplorable for this country as for Canada. The Senator from New Hampshire has stated some of the conditions along the border line, but there are others that equally demand that a very liberal rule be prescribed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee, Is it in contemplation that if this bill becomes an act the President shall issue a proclamation covering all such matters, so that the people will fully understand them?

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand that this is provided for and will be done.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am in favor of the bill as the Senator from Tennessee knows, but there is an unfortunate conflict in it that I should like to see removed.

Mr. SHIELDS. Has the Senator from Iowa a copy of the bill as proposed to be amended by the committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have a copy of the bill as reported. The bill goes into effect—and I hope Senators will mark this view of it—whenever the President finds that additional restrictions for entry into and departure from the United States are required by war conditions. That proclamation, however, is a general proclamation; it is one intended simply to bring this bill into force. When the bill is brought into force, then we have two provisions which seem to me to be not quite consistent with each other. I commend this point to the Senator from Tennessee. The moment the proclamation is issued it then becomes unlawful "for any alien to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States," except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe.

I think that that section contemplates a code of rules and regulations under which entry can be made or departure can be had; but section 4 provides that the instant the proclamation is issued, then it is unlawful for any citizen of the United States to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States unless he bears a valid passport. I do not quite understand that. A citizen of the United States in Canada who wanted to come back and every citizen who goes over any of the various railroads that pass from the United States into Canada and from Canada back into the United States would be required to be armed with a passport.

Mr. GALLINGER. Both from our Government and, if he wanted to come back, from the Canadian Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. And from Canada. There can be no objection to this bill so far as aliens are concerned; but the President has no authority under the bill to vary, modify, or change the requirements of the law with regard to American citizens who either depart from the country or enter it. I think that unless that——

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator if he has read section 2 carefully. I will ask him to read it, or I will do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have read the first section.

Mr. SHIELDS. Now, if the Senator will read the second section, he will find that the President has the power.

Mr. CUMMINS. No. It provides that—

After such proclamation as is provided for—

Mr. SHIELDS. Putting it in force.

Mr. CUMMINS (reading)— by the preceding section—

That is a general proclamation—

has been made and published, and while said proclamation is in force, it shall, except as otherwise provided by the President, be unlawful for any citizen of the United States—

Mr. SHIELDS. "Except as otherwise provided by the President."

Mr. CUMMINS. It continues:

to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States unless he bears a valid passport.

Is it the intent of the bill that every citizen of the United States who is about to leave, passing through Canada or going into Canada temporarily, must apply to the President in order to get a passport?

Mr. SHIELDS. No; the President will make general rules and regulations applicable to all persons.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the very point.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the Senator desires that made clearer, we can amend it by inserting words to that effect.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it contemplates there an individual exception, and not a rule or regulation, as is provided in the first section concerning aliens. It seems to me that the bill might be made very much clearer in that respect.

Mr. SHIELDS. The intention of the language, to which I call the Senator's attention, "except as otherwise provided by the President," is to give the President the widest discretion in making it absolutely convenient for citizens of this country to enter Canada and those in Canada to enter this country consistent with our internal condition and a state of war.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the committee took any testimony or had any information, beyond the mere request of the State Department, to show any necessity for this bill applying to our allies? I can not imagine any reason why an American citizen should be required to procure a passport to go to Canada or a Canadian citizen to come to the United States or a citizen of France to come to the United States. It seems to me unreasonable to require that intercommunication between the allies should be restricted by any such bill as this. If there is any such testimony I should like to know what it is. True, the State Department has drawn a bill that is rather difficult to understand and has sent it here, but I should like to know whether there is any real reason for such restrictions between this country and Canada.

The Senator well knows that if a tenth part of the restrictions required to obtain a passport are insisted upon it would practically be an inhibition on traffic between this country and Canada, where thousands come and go every day, and where it is necessary along the border for them to travel in order to transact their business. It seems to me the Senate should be very careful before it places such restrictions upon travel between allied countries, and especially between this country and Canada.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to say to the Senator——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to say a word in connection with what the Senator from Minnesota has just said.

Mr. SHIELDS. Very well, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Tennessee undoubtedly understands that only the Detroit River separates Michigan from Canada. The traffic there is exceedingly great between the two countries. Not only the ferries, but the bridges which connect the two countries are crowded with people passing back and forth, people living in Detroit doing business in Canada, and vice versa. If anything were done by Congress to interfere materially with that travel it would be a very serious matter, so far as Michigan cities along that river are concerned.

I have not the bill before me, because I just came in and have not had time to look at it, but certainly it seems to me that the objects which the proponents of this bill have in mind could be met without materially and radically changing the conditions of business and of labor between the United States and Canada, because, as the Senator well knows, the St. Clair River, the Huron River, and the Detroit River constitute only a narrow dividing line between the two countries, and, as I have said, the people from both countries are doing business daily and hourly across that line.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the subject to which he calls attention was pretty thoroughly discussed before he came in as regards the New Hampshire boundary, the New York boundary, and the Michigan boundary. The intention is not to inconvenience that constant, every-day intercourse now going on between the two countries, but to have such rules and regulations as will allow it to continue, consistent with the public safety.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I will yield in a moment. We would have to draw a distinction between Mexico, where the real trouble exists, and the British Empire on the north, if we included Mexico and excluded Canada. There was no hearing by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate; there was a hearing—I do not know whether it has been printed or not—as the debate in the House shows, and representatives of the Departments of State and War appeared before the Foreign Relations Committee of the House, which had charge of the bill in that body, and gave their reasons very fully concerning the necessity for it. It was there stated, as I remember, by Mr. Polk, counselor of the State Department, that the regulations would be very liberal, and in every way possible so framed to prevent any unnecessary inconvenience between the two countries.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he has any idea what those regulations are going to be? It seems to me that there is a vital difference between Canada, a country with which we are acting in cooperation in this war, and the situation in Mexico, and unless the regulations as to Canada are to be so liberal as to be practically inoperative, the legislation is going to affect every day thousands of citizens of the United States. I would not feel free to vote for this bill unless I had an assurance that the regulations to be made in connection with intercourse with Canada were so liberal that practically they would be negligible.

I should like to have the Senator answer the question whether he knows what the character of the regulations is to be?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not know the character of the regulations, except the general assurance of the departments that they will be so liberal as not to interfere with or dislocate our present relations with our allies on the north further than required to effect the very important purposes for which this legislation is proposed. Again, I say, a state of war and the composite population of this country requires and demand extraordinary measures. Everyone must submit to some inconvenience and make some sacrifice when the public welfare and existence of our Government is involved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] rose the thought was running through my mind that we ought to make an exception, so far as our allies are concerned, of the countries that are engaged with us in the war with Germany. This measure is intended to help guard the United States against enemies. Canada is engaged in exactly the same work, and there is not any danger of spies coming in from Canada or from other countries that are engaged with us in war against Germany. Therefore, why embarrass our relations with them by this legislation? Why could not a proviso be added to this effect?—

Provided, however, That this bill shall not apply to the people of those countries who are engaged with the United States in war against Germany.

I do not think that would weaken the value of the Senator's bill, would it?

Mr. SHIELDS. It would, I will answer the Senator.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. In a moment I will yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. President, it would doubtless be considered an unfriendly act if we were to discriminate between our allies and neutral countries. We need no law as to alien enemies. We have statutes providing for their arrest, internment, or expulsion if they in any way interfere with the public safety, and especially under the proclamation of the President upon that subject which he was authorized by statute to make.

What we are trying to do now is to stop what the United States is suffering from at this time, namely, the communication of the Germans with our country. It is acquiring thorough knowledge of our internal affairs and of all of our military preparations and propagating sedition and treason by using the nationals of the neutral countries, the nationals of our allies, and some renegade Americans. In order to have the protection that this country needs we must have a law applicable to all countries and to all peoples. This country is suffering, and suffering severely now, on account of the ability of the German Empire to get full information through Mexico and Cuba, using our own people, the nationals of our allies, and the nationals of neutrals for that purpose. At any time they may submarine one of our transports, carrying thousands of men, upon information so obtained. We are in constant danger of that catastrophe every day, which is one reason why this measure is pressed as one of the most urgent now pending in the Congress.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIELDS. I want to say further that I am informed by the State Department that every one of the belligerent countries immediately after the war broke out—and I suppose that includes Canada, as a part of the British Empire—passed similar laws controlling the departure and entrance of all peoples, whether their own nationals or those of their allies or of neutrals, to or from their territories.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I am sure it does not include Canada, because there has been no interruption of traffic between the United States and Canada up to the present time. That I know.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. It was on the point the Senator from Tennessee has just been discussing that I asked the question before. There is no objection to the bill, so far as any of the neutral countries are concerned, so far as Mexico is concerned, or so far as Cuba is concerned; but does the State Department state to the Senator or to the committee that it is necessary to have any such restrictions as between this country and England, or this country and Canada?

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly; and I have just given the reason for it. Certainly, if it is necessary as to our own citizens, it is necessary as to our allies. We do not know who the Germans may employ as their agents. The law must apply to everyone to be effective. This is evident, I think.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not admit that it is necessary as to our own citizens.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not understand the Senator to question that.

Mr. KELLOGG. England has no such restrictions against this country. I do not wish to do anything or say anything that will prevent the strongest regulations being made to carry out what the Senator has in mind, but I can not see any possible reason for applying it to Canada. England has made no such rules as between Canada and this country.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand she has.

Mr. KELLOGG. Canadian citizens come here at will.

Mr. SHIELDS. Can not the Senator see that the natural thing for the German Empire to do would be to employ Englishmen, or Frenchmen, or even Americans, or the citizens or subjects of any neutral country, to act as spies in this country? They could escape detection a great deal better than a German, with his appearance and his accent. The danger comes from infamous scoundrels belonging to our allies and to our own Nation. The corrupt and despicable conduct of the Germans are too well known to be referred to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, it came under my observation—and this may satisfy the mind of the Senator from Minnesota—that Germans have been masquerading in Paris as American soldiers, and that they have been the cause of a great deal of trouble. Men who were eyewitnesses have informed me that they have seen well-known Germans whom they knew in Berlin wearing American uniforms in the streets of Paris, and as soon as the alarm was given they were traced to their hotels, but had disappeared. It has also come under my observation that England requires, after we have issued a passport, to have a visé made by the consul general in New York; and so the other countries have provided restrictive measures.

So I think the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota is utterly impracticable—to allow the free coming and going of citizens of allied countries. There necessarily must be restrictions, and the department, of course, should make those restrictions. It can not be done by legislation, because it is a matter of judging individual cases.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from California what are the restrictions now upon travel between Canada and the United States?

Mr. PHELAN. Between Canada and the United States? The Senator's remarks referred more particularly to France.

Mr. KELLOGG. Oh, well, I merely mentioned France.

Mr. PHELAN. I say it is impracticable to allow the free coming and going of citizens of allied countries for the reasons I state. I am not familiar with the Canadian situation.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to support any bill that will go to any extent that is necessary. I simply wish to find out whether the State Department has given any consideration to the subject of transportation between this country and Canada.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that they have given the matter very full consideration and expect to make rules that will inconvenience those relations just as little as possible under present conditions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to say that, of course, I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of this bill, and I will go just as far as it is necessary to go to accomplish the purposes of the bill, but it is a matter of very great importance to the people of our State, and to the people all along the border. I know that the intentions of the department are good, but it has been my experience that in trying to carry out those intentions they have adopted very unwise regulations concerning matters and conditions with which they are not very familiar.

I am going to ask, therefore, that this bill go over until to-morrow, in order to have an opportunity to give it a little more consideration. It has not been printed as recommended by the committee, and all I know about the amendments is simply what I have learned from hearing the bill read. I merely want to advise the Senator that I am going to ask that the bill go over until to-morrow. I shall not object to its consideration to-morrow, myself.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, of course the bill can not be disposed of now without unanimous consent, and if the Senator from Washington objects it will have to go over under the rule. It is a very important measure and is worthy of the careful consideration and attention of every Senator. I will ask that the report be printed, along with the bill, so that every Senator can ascertain the nature of the legislation fully and accurately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether there is anything in the bill—I can not find it if there is—that gives authority to the President to relax existing restrictions?

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill authorizes him to prescribe rules and regulations in his discretion.

Mr. PHELAN. The first part of the bill reads, Mr. President:

> When the United States is at war, if the President shall find that the public safety requires that restrictions and prohibitions in addition to those provided otherwise than by this act be imposed upon the departure of persons from and their entry into the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I did not quite understand the Senator, but he can rest assured that the object of this legislation is not to relax present restrictions but to provide for others. His suggestion would be antagonistic to every motive for bringing about the enactment of this legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question with reference to the bill, to meet some question that came up in my mind. I want to ask whether or not the President can absolutely abrogate any provisions with reference to requiring passports between Canada and this country?

Mr. SHIELDS. Under the bill I think he can; but if there is any doubt about that, it can be made clear by proper amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I wanted to know. Then, furthermore, if passports should be required, as I understand, they would have to be applied for as the law now provides. That is, they would have to apply here in Washington City to get a passport, and they would also have to pay, I assume, the fees that the law now requires. That could not be abrogated under this bill, could it?

Mr. SHIELDS. I think so. I think the President could regulate the entire matter under this bill, and the object of giving him that broad power is to enable him to meet any emergency that may arise, and to meet it quickly. The evil and emergency demand prompt and decisive Executive action.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator think that where passports are required the President could relieve the applicant from paying the fee required by law?

Mr. SHIELDS. I think he could under this bill; but there is no passport required between the United States and Canada now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But if under that act he should require passports, then would they have to pay a dollar? That is the fee that has to be paid now when a person applies for a passport.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think that would be an unreasonable regulation and contrary to what I am informed the Department of State proposes to do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I do not understand that that is controlled by regulation; and the question that came up in my mind was if the President should require passports whether, under the power given in this act, he could relieve the applicant for a passport from paying the fee that he now has to pay?

Mr. SHIELDS. It is possible that some fee might be required; but we must remember that we are in a state of war, and that we have dangerous practices going on which must be stopped. The great foreign population, many of whom are from the very countries with which we are at war complicates the situation seriously, and we must resort to drastic measures. There is no other country in the world confronted with such conditions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that; I appreciate that, but I do not want to double the evil.

Mr. SHIELDS. We have to resort to extraordinary measures, and all of our people have to make some sacrifices and submit to some inconvenience for the public safety.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not questioning that, but what I want to get at is the construction that the Senator puts upon this act with reference to these particular conditions. I am not saying that they ought not to be required to pay a fee. I am just trying to find out whether or not, after this act is passed and passports are required, they would have to make their applications here in Washington City, taking possibly 10 days at the shortest time from our State—they could not do it by telegraph—and whether they would have to pay fees, and all that sort of thing?

Mr. SHIELDS. I think that would be very inconvenient and ought not to apply to this every-day intercourse. I will say to the Senator that I will give that feature of the matter further attention, but the law must be made effective whatever temporary inconvenience it may create.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to give notice that I shall ask unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of this bill during the morning hour to-morrow.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 4507) to provide for the registration of charities for purposes connected with the present war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 4508) for the relief of James Shook; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4509) granting an increase of pension to Dora L. Brown; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 4510) granting a pension to Jefferson Jordan;

A bill (S. 4511) granting an increase of pension to William H. Blackwell; and

A bill (S. 4512) granting an increase of pension to Joel I. Long (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN:

A bill (S. 4513) granting an increase of pension to Mattie Ashby Birney; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KENYON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for clinical examination, advice, cure, and maintenance of children under 6 years of age, under a contract to be made with the Washington Diet Kitchen, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION TO UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3402) to fix the age limits for candidates for admission to the United States

Naval Academy, which was, in lines 4 and 5, to strike out "between the ages of sixteen and twenty years on July" and insert "not less than sixteen years of age nor more than twenty years of age on April."

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 9093. An act to amend the act approved September 8, 1916, chapter 470, Statutes at Large, Sixty-fourth Congress, relating to pensions, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PRODUCTION OF AIRCRAFT.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that tomorrow, after the close of the routine morning business, I shall submit to the Senate some observations regarding what is called the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association and the so-called license and cross-license agreement under which the activities of aviation are being largely conducted.

PRICE OF FARM IMPLEMENTS.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, during the morning hour a few days ago I had considered Senate resolution 223, to require the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the high price of farming implements and articles used by the farmer in production. On objection by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the morning hour was consumed and the resolution went to the calendar. I have agreed with the Senator from New Hampshire on an amendment to the resolution, and I think that if the resolution is laid before the Senate, so that I can amend it, it can be passed without any further debate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not catch the number of the resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is Senate resolution 223.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the number of the order of business?

Mr. THOMPSON. Three hundred and seventy-seven.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas ask unanimous consent to take up the resolution?

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like unanimous consent to complete its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is it, Mr. President?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a Senate resolution to require the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the cost of farming implements and to report as to whether there are any unfair methods of competition employed in handling the same.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember the resolution, it not only covered farming implements, but it covered everything that was made in the United States.

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, no; it simply covers the tools and implements and other articles required to be bought and used by the farmer in production. I am ready to offer the amendment that I have agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr President, I shall not object if the Senator wants to press the resolution, but it seems to me that it is an entirely useless proceeding. Everybody knows that the cost of everything used by the farmer, just like the cost of everything used by the people who are not farmers, has in some instances doubled and in some instances more than doubled. The only result of this investigation will be a report to the Senate about something that we already know.

Two or three sessions ago the Senate ordered the publication of a report concerning electric power, the purpose of which was to demonstrate that there was a monopoly in electric power in the country. It cost the people $91,000 to publish that report. It told no one anything that was not already known and, except for the hole that it made in the appropriations for that year, no one now recalls that it was ever published; so that I think this is really a waste of time and of energy. I shall not object, however.

Mr. THOMPSON. The passage of this resolution will entail no such expense. It provides that the Federal Trade Commission, created for that purpose, shall make the investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the report will be sold for old paper in a little time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us find out whether there is any objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President; I object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The morning business is closed.

ADULT ILLITERACY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMOOT. Because a certain Senator wanted to be in the Chamber when this bill was brought up for consideration, I shall have to suggest the absence of a quorum in order to give time for him to be here. Therefore, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is unavoidably absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is necessarily absent, owing to illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). Sixty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4185. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. KING. I call for a division.

On a division the motion was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, under Rule VIII, to consider bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia objects.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under the rule, the calendar is in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; it is not.

Mr. SMOOT. What is before the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is nothing before the Senate at the present time.

Mr. SMOOT. The calendar is in order under the rule.

ALLOWANCE OF OVERDRAFTS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, Senate bill 3895, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3895) to regulate the allowance of overdrafts by national banking associations and to provide penalties for its violation.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the pending amendment is one that was offered by myself last evening to strike out section 2 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that the Senator is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Secretary read the section that is proposed to be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to strike out section 2, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That national banking associations doing business in a State, the laws of which prohibit overdrafts and impose penalties therefor, shall be subject to the same restrictions and penalties that are prescribed by such State laws for State banks and trust companies.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], having this bill in charge, has submitted to me for consideration a substitute for section 2, which I understand he will offer.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I shall offer it.

Mr. SMOOT. For the information of the Senate, I shall read it, and then I desire to make a few remarks upon it. The Senator from Colorado will offer as a substitute for section 2 the following——

Mr. GALLINGER. Has it been offered?

Mr. SMOOT. He will offer it, I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to be read from the desk if the Senator from Colorado offers it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to speak on it now.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

Mr. SMOOT. It reads:

SEC. 2. In any case in which overdrafts are permitted by the directors or officers of national banks, the directors or officers permitting such overdrafts shall be personally liable for any loss resulting therefrom, and where such overdrafts are not authorized by the directors or officers of the national bank the employee paying the check or checks of a depositor whose balance is insufficient to cover the amount of such check or checks shall be personally liable for the loss that results therefrom.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Utah permit me before he discusses this proposed amendment to ask him one question for my personal enlightenment relating to it?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is scarcely anything relating to the public business that I know less about than I do of banking. I ask the Senator if it is possible that the officers of any bank deliberately agree that they will allow overdrafts in their bank?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President; they do.

Mr. GALLINGER. They do?

Mr. SMOOT. They do allow it.

Mr. GALLINGER. They may allow it, but would they put themselves on record as allowing it? This provides for a case where they have agreed to recognize overdrafts.

Mr. SMOOT. Quite often there is an arrangement made by depositors with the cashier of the bank or the loaning committee, or in some cases with the director of the bank, that they will be allowed a certain overdraft. There is no law against it affecting national banks, and I want to say to the Senator that it is almost the universal practice of the banks of this country to allow certain overdrafts.

Mr. GALLINGER. Individual overdrafts?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not limited to individual overdrafts.

Mr. GALLINGER. It says "overdrafts."

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, it is either an individual overdraft or a corporation overdruft. The party or company making the deposit in drawing a check against it may overdraw the account.

Mr. GALLINGER. It strikes me as being a very loose way of doing banking business and a very dangerous principle in connection with banking. But, as I said, I know very little about banking and I am not——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that it comes about in this way. Suppose the Senator from New Hampshire had a deposit in the bank of $500, and he issued two checks, one of them for $250 and the other for $260. That would overdraw his account $10, provided he had made no deposit in the meantime to cover it. There is no bank in the United States as long as it is not unlawful that would throw out the Senator's check, protest it, and perhaps not only once but in every case where it passed through a bank, and pile up an expense on the Senator of perhaps $20 or $30.

Mr. GALLINGER. My answer to that would be that if banking is conducted upon the high principles of justice and morality, as I supposed it was, I would do that if I was the official of the bank.

Mr. SMOOT. An overdraft is nothing more nor less than a temporary loan. As I said, I do not believe there is a bank in the United States that does not have overdrafts at some time or other.

Of course, if the Senator's idea was to be put into effect I do not know but that it would be the wisest policy to follow at this time, and there should be a prohibition of all overdrafts. I am quite sure if that were the case the banks of the country would be glad to accept it, although it would work a hardship many times upon small depositors, and particularly on women and men who do not keep strict account of their checks drawn and never know when they are overdrawn until they are notified by the cashier of the bank when a check overdrawing the account is presented.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me one further observation, I will not interfere any further. It looks to me as though legislation of the kind proposed is a direct invitation to people to make overdrafts. They are not going to be punished for them and they are going to be carried by the bank, and if a loss comes it comes to the bank. I think it is not wise legislation to encourage people to do anything irregular in business transactions.

Mr. SMOOT. In practice to-day if an overdraft is lost, the bank loses that amount of money just the same as it would if it lost on a note.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. But this amendment provides that if the overdraft is sanctioned by the officers of a national banking association, and there is a loss through that overdraft, then the officers of the association granting that privilege shall pay the loss.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understand, the Senator moves to strike out section 2.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then the substitute will be offered later.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is the program.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand section 2, which the Senator proposes to strike out, is to apply the same restrictions to national bank overdrafts that are applied to State banks and trust companies where the State laws require that there shall be no overdrafts. There are States where it is unlawful for the State banks to permit an overdraft.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know of a State that has such a law as that?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am assuming that is true because of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The only State I ever heard of that had such a law was developed in the discussion yesterday by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and immediately the junior Senator from North Dakota, he being president of three banks in North Dakota, said there was not one of the banks over which he presided that did not allow overdrafts. You can examine the bank statements of North Dakota and I do not believe that there is a bank in North Dakota but what has overdrafts. Yet they say it is a violation of the law.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This is what I happen to know about State banks, for instance, in Michigan. I do not think there is an express prohibition, but I know the banking commission is all the time discouraging overdrafts and insisting that they are bad things and ought not to be permitted. What I was assuming was that whoever drew this bill knew that there are State laws which prohibit the use of overdrafts by State banks and trust companies. What I am wondering at is, if such a State law does exist anywhere, why it ought not to apply to national banks the same as to State banks.

Mr. SMOOT. That was discussed yesterday, I will say to the Senator, and one great reason for that is this: National banks ought not to be subject to State laws, and should they be, it would be entering upon a new practice and would be compelling national banks to be subject to whatever laws might be passed by the States upon any particular banking subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the laws with relation to these matters. There are such laws in Arkansas, California, Indiana, Kansas, North Dakota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, and West Virginia. Those States have laws of a restrictive nature. Some of them are of this nature. For instance, in the State of Montana the law provides that:

Every officer, teller, or clerk of a savings bank who knowingly overdraws his account and obtains the funds is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Then, again, there are laws in North Dakota and Kansas which read as follows:

Any bank officer or employee who pays out the funds of the bank on the order of one who has not on deposit a sum equal to the check is personally liable to the bank for the amount paid.

Those laws are restrictive in their nature. Some of those laws are penal, while some simply impose a money liability.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course the Senator can readily see that there ought to be laws to prevent the officers of any bank from using the bank for their own private purposes. Such a law ought to be passed in every State, and I had thought that every State in the Union had such a law.

Mr. President, even the proposed substitute will, in a degree, hamper business; it will hamper a depositor who carries a credit of two hundred or three hundred dollars, who happens to issue a check or checks which would represent an overdraft of merely $1. Then immediately the bank officials, under the proposed law, would be compelled to protest that check, and before the protest is concluded it will cost the depositor $20. Why, if I were an officer of a bank, I would rather pay the dollar out of my own pocket and deposit it to the credit of the maker of the check, in order that the check might be paid.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. It is on the line with which the Senator is now dealing that I want to ask him a question. If his substitute be adopted, applying, of course, to national banks, is it not a fact that such a law would now have the effect of possibly increasing the number of small State banks, which would not belong to the reserve association and would not come under the national banking laws, when the whole attempt of the Treasury Department of the United States and of the reserve association is to get all of the State banks under the national banking laws and to thereby strengthen the reserve association and that branch of the banking business?

I will say very frankly that in the sparsely settled portions of this country where there is very little currency handled, in the payment of ranch employees and others who are very many miles from any banking facilities, the little banks, even the mercantile establishments doing a little banking business along with it, afford great assistance in the transaction of business. I know of little country banks, checks upon private accounts in which are circulated through other countries, and which possibly do not return for several months, where business is done by cattlemen and others by an arrangement that their overdrafts for a certain amount may be taken care of in the event that the check which they have given out, possibly six months before, may come in, although they are not keeping close account. The foreman of a ranch, for instance, who is paying off the men may not be keeping in close touch with the bank account. The refusal of the bank to honor an overdraft where it is $10 on a $200 check would possibly entirely ruin the credit of the party drawing the check, when it was innocently done and as a matter of common custom. I know that it is so in my section. I have been connected with banks in various capacities, and I know much more about the overdraft department than any other. I can therefore say to Senators that when they touch upon the overdraft department of the banking business they are trenching immediately upon private matters.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what the Senator from New Mexico has so well said is known by all western bankers. In justice to the proposed substitute, I will say that there is not a prohibition as to paying an overdraft; but, if it is paid, the bank must make good whatever loss might arise from the payment of it.

Mr. President, the people in the East hardly realize what difficulties we in the West have in reference to currency. For instance, here in Washington there is new currency given to us every——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Every 30 days.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, every two weeks or almost every time we receive currency it is new, fresh from the press. Out West, if we receive any currency at all, it is generally old and nearly worn out. That is not because the people of the West desire unclean currency, but can not afford to pay the express charges on used currency for new from the West to Washington, and then upon the new currency forwarded from Washington to the little banks throughout the western country.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Utah yield for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. FALL. To illustrate exactly the conditions, I may say this: I know of ranches, for example, where there are from 40 to 50 men paid every month by check. Those men are paid by checks issued by the foremen. The foremen have nothing to do with the bank account itself. The money deposited to meet those checks will come, say, from Colorado or from Washington or from somewhere else. The arrangement is made that there shall be a monthly deposit made to cover any checks. In so far as the actual pay roll is concerned, of course, the person responsible for the deposit of the money to meet such checks knows the amount that will be necessary for that purpose, and will deposit that amount; but sometimes it is not convenient to carry a large deposit there, such deposit being carried in some other bank. So a check will be drawn upon the mother bank, for instance, in Colorado, and be sent to the local bank through which the foreman deals. The foreman's checks, which are issued for the payment of the pay rolls, are common currency and are accepted all over the country. They may not be presented for payment for one, two, three, or four months. Indeed, they may be sent to another country, as I have known them to be sent into Mexico, and they may be four months coming back. The foreman understands that the bank will pay every check which he draws, and he has nothing to do with the deposits to cover such checks. Arrangements are always made that a bank overdraft is understood to be perfectly good, and the bank will unhesitatingly pay checks even to the extent of several hundred dollars, or possibly several thousand dollars, when the money is not on deposit, they knowing that they can on a telegram have the amount at once deposited to cover it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know of public institutions whose expenses are provided for at a monthly meeting of the directors of the institution. The institution may be located in a small city and its funds be drawn from the capital of the State. During the month the institution is allowed to pay its expenses by checks upon the local bank, and at the meeting of the directors on or about the first of the month an appropriation is made to cover all such checks and a check is issued and deposited to cover the overdrafts which have been made during the month.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am sorry I was not here yesterday; but was the object of this bill stated yesterday, or has it been stated at any time? What is it for? What evil is it supposed to remedy?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know definitely, Mr. President, why the 16 bills that are now on the calendar, beginning with this one and winding up with a bill for guaranteeing bank deposits, are proposed——

Mr. KING. Have we got such a bill as that?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; that is to follow; it is included in this bunch of bills now on the calendar. I believe the reason for the proposed legislation is this: There is some one in the Treasury Department who has been interested in looking up State banking laws, perhaps for the first time in all his life, and discovered a lot of facts he thinks should be incorporated into the national banking laws. He then prepares a bill covering the idea and rushes to the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee and requests its introduction and passage as an administration or war measure——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a minute. Some of the bills now on the calendar can do no harm, but I undertake to say that there is not one of the 16 that will ever assist the banking business of this country one iota.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, is not the explanation possibly to be found in the fact that a little time ago we passed a banking bill, which was said to be the most perfect banking bill in all the world, and to make sure that it is such a bill we have amended it, I think, 21 times now?

Mr. SMOOT. Twenty-two times, as I remember.

Mr. GALLINGER. Twenty-two times; and we have 12 bills now on the calendar dealing with it.

Mr. SMOOT. Sixteen.

Mr. GALLINGER. Sixteen. That will demonstrate how perfect that piece of legislation was that has been advertised to the world as being the most perfect piece of banking legislation that any country ever devised; and the party that went out of power has been very severely criticized for not having been able to evolve such a wonderful piece of legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just to call the attention of the Senate to the trifling provisions of the legislation that is being asked at this time, take the bill that is now under consideration and read the first section of it. Listen to this:

> That the officers of national banking associations shall present in writing at each meeting of the board of directors a list of all overdrafts made or allowed since the last meeting of the board, which list shall be noted on the minutes of the meeting and filed as a record of the association.

Why, Mr. President, if there is a banking association in the United States that does not require such reports it ought to go out of business.

Mr. KENYON. Suppose they do not do it, what will the bill do to them—anything?

Mr. SMOOT. Nothing.

Mr. KENYON. It is persuasive.

Mr. SMOOT. It is persuasive. I take it for granted that the banks of this country chartered by the Government of the United States have men of sufficient brains directing their affairs to at least know who are entitled to an overdraft. Not only does every bank that I know anything about require a complete list of the overdrafts to be submitted at every board meeting, but they require also a list of all loans made during the month, and they must be O. K'd and passed upon by the directors. It seems that some officials of the Treasury Department have come to the conclusion that the time has arrived to teach the A B C's of banking to directors of the national banking associations of the country. If that is what is wanted, it can not do any harm to pass this bill; but, Mr. President, it will never do any good.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator that a school might be established?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; with a fool department clerk in every city and town where a national bank is located at a salary befitting such a high and mighty position.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I will state that I had a talk with the Comptroller of the Currency this morning; the chief bank examiner was also present, and said that even matters of loans were not submitted to the directors by a great many of the banks, and he said that, so far as overdrafts were concerned, he was satisfied that in the case of not more than one-half of the banks were they presented at the directors' meetings. I do not know as to the operation of banks, but the comptroller is trying to prevent evil; he is trying to prevent failures of banks; and this is a matter that is directly in the interest of the solvency of banks and can do no harm it seems to me.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not imagine in what sections of this country that examiner has been traveling.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I can say that if he had traveled in New Mexico 25 years ago and if he had read the Supreme Court reports in the case of Dane and others he would find that for such derelictions as that directors and officers of banks had been punished by a term of 10 years in prison.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think there is any necessity for the passage of this measure.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. Some Senators said on the floor, I think, yesterday, although it may have been in private conversation, that overdrafts were the cause of the failure of many banks. I should like to know what the Senator's opinion about that is. I never heard such an argument as that before.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there have been cases of failures where overdrafts were shown to exist.

Mr. KENYON. The question of collusion would be involved also?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, certainly; and I will say to the Senator that if there had been no overdrafts the same result could have been accomplished by signing a note and it would make no difference as to results. The same bank authorities that pass upon the lending of money on a note also pass upon the question as to whether any person dealing with the bank shall be allowed an overdraft of a dollar or ten dollars or a hundred dollars or a thousand dollars or whatever the amount may be.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. In further reply to the question of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] I will state that several years ago I was somewhat interested in that question and made rather an exhaustive inquiry and some study at that time to determine whether or not any bank failure could be proximately and directly traceable to overdrafts. I was unable to find any. I found that in a number of cases where there had been bank failures there had been overdrafts, but, as my colleague has just said, in most of those cases where there were overdrafts, they would have been covered up by notes if notes had been asked for; and the failure of the bank was not traceable to overdrafts, but to improper management and control of the bank, and in some instances to the criminality of the directors. They had loaned to themselves or had loaned to corporations in which they had secret interests or to partnerships in which they were indirectly interested, or to some of their friends or relatives or business interests.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say that when it comes to the actual workings of the banking system it will be found that there are very few men who carry reasonable or sizable accounts with a bank whose accounts do not at some time or other appear in red as overdrawn. It comes about in this way: I receive in my business, for instance, a large number of checks and drafts; I send them to my New York bank, and they credit me the current items when the checks come to hand, but there will be some checks, drawn perhaps on cities which are far away, like Denver——

Mr. SMOOT. Or on banks in Canada.

Mr. PAGE. Or, perhaps, on banks in Canada. They do not credit those items until they get returns. Sometimes those returns, through the carelessness of banks to whom they are sent for collection, are very slow in coming in, and the result is that if I keep drawing on my account as against those remittances, which I made in good faith, once in a while there will be an overdraft, and my account will show in red. That is the case with the best business men who do business with New York and Boston banks; but the banks in New York know that my account is always good; they know that I do not intentionally overdraw; and I think I can say that I would no more think of overdrawing my account than I would think of allowing a note of mine to become overdue and be protested. But it will happen; and the banks simply say, when they get an overdraft, "Mr. PAGE, your account is in the red to-day so much. We take it for granted that there is some mistake somewhere in the account, so we notify you"; but the account is always taken care of.

I do not know but that some good may be done by the passage of this bill, but I believe a great deal of harm can be done. Speaking of the failure of banks, so far as my own State is concerned, there has been only one failure there in a great many years, and that was the People's National Bank of Swanton. It failed because it loaned money on real estate. The Senator from Colorado was saying yesterday that it was a very nice thing that this change was made, to permit national banks to loan money on real estate. I disagree with him. I think the assets of a national bank should be kept liquid. They should not be put into real estate. In Colorado it may work out well; but when you come to the great majority of the great banks of the country, I believe it is an absolute wrong to permit them to loan their money, which should always be kept liquid, on real estate, when we know that nine times out of ten such a loan is supposed to be continued month after month and year after year.

Let us be sensible about this matter. If there is any great wrong going on, if there are many banks failing because of overdrafts, I should like to know it; but if it is only one here and there, I should hate to overturn the whole system of banking, which has been built up by years of experience, simply because somebody wants to change the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senate desires to adopt the proposed section 2 as a substitute and pass such legislation, well and good. I do not think it is worth while for me to discuss this question any further at this time. I hope we will get a vote on this bill to-day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator withdraw his amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment to strike out section 2 of the bill, with the understanding that the Senator will substitute the amendment that I have read to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah withdraws his amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I then offer as a substitute for section 2 the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 2 as printed in the bill and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 2. In any case in which overdrafts are permitted by the directors or officers of national banks, the directors or officers permitting such overdrafts shall be personally liable for any loss resulting therefrom; and where such overdrafts are not authorized by the directors or officers of a national bank, the employee paying the check or checks of a depositor whose balance is insufficient to cover the amount of such check or checks shall be personally liable for any loss that results therefrom.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say a few words with relation to this bill.

The object and purpose of the bill is to make overdrafts as small and as few as possible. The Comptroller of the Currency has for the last five years been endeavoring to get the banks to take action along this line. He has sent out circular letter after circular letter concerning the subject. He tells me that it is a considerable evil to permit overdrafts. He says it sometimes happens that a director of a bank who has borrowed to the full limit allowed by the law will, in addition, induce a paying teller to accept an overdraft which makes his indebtedness far in excess of the amount that he otherwise is permitted to borrow under the law; and if that were presented to the directors, they never would allow it. Under those circumstances there ought to be a check on the director.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not want the Senate to believe that in such a case the very first report that would be made by the bank examiner to the Comptroller of the Currency the Comptroller of the Currency would not immediately make an order to the bank commanding that it be taken care of, does he?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no doubt of that, but inasmuch as these reports are not made often—the reports of overdrafts come to the department only once every six months——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, they come oftener than that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; that is the fact, they tell me there.

Mr. SMOOT. They have five examinations a year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, well, they may have some additional general examinations; I do not know; but a tabulation of overdrafts to particular individuals is made only twice a year, as I am told.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read a circular letter which was sent out by the comptroller, which gives a pretty fair view of this matter:

A circular letter addressed by the Comptroller of the Currency to national banks in the matter of overdrafts says:

"This office acknowledges with appreciation the efforts which the national banks generally throughout the country have made in cooperating to eliminate the overdraft evil.

"The reports of condition submitted by the national banks as of May 1, 1915, show that as a result of the efforts in this connection of the national banks and of their customers and of this office, the total amount of overdrafts in all national banks, which on February 4, 1913, amounted to $22,307,066 (or $2.67 per $1,000 of total deposits), had been reduced on June 30, 1914, to $15,485,641, and as a result of the special efforts put forth since that time, the total amount of the overdrafts in the 7,604 national banks of the United States had been reduced on May 1, 1915, to $5,904,374, or 66 cents per $1,000 of total deposits.

"The national banks of the country report that the aggregate amount of losses which they charged off during the calendar years 1912, 1913, and 1914 on account of overdrafts was $1,209,334, of which $80,223 was in the New England States, $285,617 in the Eastern States, $252,994 in the Southern States, $216,704 in the Middle States, $213,807 in the Western States, and $159,989 in the Pacific States.

"It is hoped that efforts to eliminate overdrafts entirely will be continued, and that they may before long disappear entirely from bank statements."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the letter from which the Senator reads, or does any data which he has in his hands, reveal the amount that was charged off on account of bad notes or discounts?

Mr SHAFROTH. This is just the amount which is stated—that there was a loss of $1,209,000 in 1912, 1913, and 1914.

Mr. KING. That is on overdrafts?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is on overdrafts.

Mr. KING. But the Senator's information does not state the loss the banks sustained or the amounts which the banks charged off on account of bad paper?

Mr SHAFROTH. No; but the Comptroller of the Currency tells me that often an overdraft is made and cashed by the bank, and when the party can not make it good, he merges it in a note, and consequently, as quickly as the note is made, the loss is reported by the bank as a loss from a bad note; and he says a great many of these notes that prove to be worthless are the result of an overdraft and is covered up by the execution of the note.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no banker who would allow an overdraft to anybody unless he was perfectly willing to make a loan to that party.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there are banks in this country that have directors who are not the best directors on earth, and who are operating the bank solely for some personal advantage. The public are interested in these banks. It is not only a question of the bankers themselves. We do not want bank failures, and consequently safeguards are thrown around these banks for the very purpose of compelling directors to do things that will prevent losses to the banks. On that account, this being a measure which the comptroller himself admits it is of the greatest importance to have passed, it seems to me that we ought to have no difficulty in getting this legislation through.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a letter which I have in my desk, and from which I will read. It is a circular that was sent out by the Comptroller of the Currency some time ago, and I will read a part of it:

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Minor v. Mechanics Bank (1 Peters, 71) rendered the following opinion on the subject of overdrafts:

"It is a usage to allow customers to overdraw, and to have their checks and notes charged up, without present funds in the bank—stripped of all technical disguise the usage and practice thus attempted to be sanctioned is a usage and practice to misapply the funds of the bank; and to connive at the withdrawal of the same, without any security, in favor of certain privileged persons. Such a usage and practice is surely a manifest departure from the duty, both of the directors and cashier, as can not receive any countenance in a court of justice. It could not be supported by any vote of the directors, however formal, and therefore whenever done by the cashier is at his own peril and upon the responsibility of himself and his sureties. It is anything but 'well and truly executing his duties as cashier.'"

The overdrafts in national banks of the United States, as reported on the call of the Comptroller of the Currency, within the last few years have been reported as high as 47 millions and as low as 18 millions, with an average for the five years of 27.2 millions.

Since the Currency Bureau was established this office has persistently criticized the granting of overdrafts, with the result that the banks in many places have agreed to discontinue them, and have entered into a formal agreement to that effect. The legislation of the different States on the question of overdrafts, as well as the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the subject, is brought to your attention in order that you may take the matter up with the banks in your district.

That is a circular that was sent out by the comptroller; and I will say to the Senators from North Dakota who are here that there is a law in North Dakota, there is a law in Arkansas, there is a law in California, there is a law in Indiana, and in Kansas, and in Michigan, and in Wisconsin, relating to the same subject matter that the Senators, in the discussion yesterday, referred to. But inasmuch as the substitute which I have offered for section 2 seems to satisfy the Treasury Department, it seems to me there can be no possible objection to it, and I do not think that the Senator from Utah does object to it. At least, he has given way by withdrawing his motion and has permitted this to be offered as a substitute, and he did not indicate that he would oppose it.

Now, this is the substitute that we offer. Instead of making any reference whatever to State laws, we cut out this provision:

SEC. 2. That national banking associations doing business in a State, the laws of which prohibit overdrafts and impose penalties therefor, shall be subject to the same restrictions and penalties that are prescribed by such State laws for State banks and trust companies.

On yesterday there were a number of Senators who thought that we ought not to mix State laws and national laws; and consequently there has been drawn, to meet that objection, this substitute for section 2, which, it seems to me, no one should have any objection to. It permits overdrafts, but it does not permit them unless the directors sanction them, and if the directors do not sanction them the employees making them become personally liable for the overdrafts. So if a person that they know is personally responsible makes an overdraft they can cash the overdraft, but it imposes a liability which makes them hesitate, and only in a case where the party is absolutely good would they, under those circumstances, permit an overdraft.

Section 2, which I have offered as a substitute, provides as follows:

SEC. 2. In any case in which overdrafts are permitted by the directors or officers of national banks the directors or officers permitting such overdrafts shall be personally liable for any loss resulting therefrom; and where such overdrafts are not authorized by the directors or officers of a national bank, the employee paying the check or checks of a depositor whose balance is insufficient to cover the amount of such check or checks shall be personally liable for any loss that results therefrom.

Mr. President, evidently in cases where there is doubt as to whether the overdraft will be paid the cashier or the paying teller who permits it will have to be absolutely assured that the money will be coming to the bank if he cashes the check. The comptroller has said to me that there are instances where directors did not want the other directors of the bank to know that they were overdrawing, and, after getting all of the money that they could by virtue of a loan, being limited to one-tenth of the amount of the capital stock, they would in some instances go to the paying teller and induce him to cash an overdraft in order that they might get more money. Of course, they intend to make it good, but sometimes they failed, and it is failures of that kind that make a bank go down on some occasions.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the bill, by virtue of that substitute, should meet with the objection of no one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I assume from the argument which was made yesterday that the Comptroller of the Currency fathered the bill which was presented yesterday; but certainly the Senator in charge of the bill must admit that he could not recognize the proposition which is presented to-day as anything but an alien, and an alien enemy, not at all related in any way, shape, or form, to the bill which the Senator from Colorado so urgently supported only yesterday.

All of the argument that was made during the entire afternoon of yesterday in support of this bill was in support of uniformity of action under the State law as it affected both national banks and State banks, and therefore the provision was drawn, and there was not anything else in that bill except that the law of a State relative to overdrafts should apply the same to National banks as to State banks. In other words, there was to be a uniformity of the penalty for disobeying a State law, whether it affected a national bank or a State bank.

The amendment which the Senator offers to-day destroys the uniformity. He does that thing which yesterday he stated he wished to avoid, and that was the lack of uniformity in the application of the law. So to-day he has a provision which will make it an offense to make an overdraft in one State if it is on a national bank, but if the State laws do not make it an offense to overdraw an account on a State bank in that same State then you have a law making it an offense to overdraw on a national bank and not an offense to have an overdraft upon a State bank.

Mr. SHAFFROTH. I will state to the Senator that the comptroller would prefer the other provision, and I would prefer it also, but it was manifest from the discussion that was had here that that provision could not pass. The sole object and purpose of all this legislation is to prevent overdrafts as much as possible.

I want to call the attention of the Senator to the laws that the Senator has referred to as existing in North Dakota. They are not of the penal nature that the Senator imagines. Here is the provision with relation to Kansas and to North Dakota banks. They are identically the same provision, and it is a provision that—

Any bank officer or employee who pays out the funds of the bank on the order of one who has not on deposit a sum equal to the check is personally liable to the bank for the amount paid.

That is practically identical with this amendment, and it does not conflict with any of the laws of the State. It may be an addition, but nevertheless it is carrying out the policy of the Comptroller of the Currency to make overdrafts as light as possible.

Mr. McCUMBER. How many States have that law?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will read them.

Mr. McCUMBER. You can give me generally the number.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They vary very much. For instance, Arkansas has this provision:

Any officer or employee permitting an overdraft is personally liable for the amount unless the drawer of such check, order, or draft has previously arranged with the board of directors for a line of credit sufficient to cover such payment. The board of directors, however, are authorized to ratify such overdraft and relieve the employee from such liability.

There is a provision somewhat similar, and yet in different words in California:

Any director, officer, employee, etc., of a bank who knowingly overdraws his account and obtains the funds of his bank and asks or receives a consideration for procuring a loan from or discount by his bank, or for permitting an overdraft of an account with the bank, is guilty of a felony.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will not ask the Sentaor to read them. Tell me what the law is in Missouri.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Court of Appeals of the State of Missouri, in the case of Market Street Bank v. Stumpe (Second Missouri Appeals Report, 543), decided that——

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the statutory law rather than the court decision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is stated here in the decision. The court decided that—

The mere fact that the directors of a bank knew of and sanctioned overdrafts will not release from liability the sureties of a teller who causes a loss to the bank by permitting overdrafts. The directors of a bank have no power to sanction overdraft.

Mr. McCUMBER. As a matter of fact, there are a number of States which have no laws with reference to overdrafts.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so, but there are not——

Mr. McCUMBER. All right. Now, we will have a law when we get through that will cover the overdraft of national banks that will not cover, of course, overdrafts upon State banks. Therefore you will have two laws, both of them providing for penalties. I do not mean a penalty by imprisonment, but both of them providing for penalties which will apply within the confines of a State to national banks that will not apply to State banks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may be——

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not care about taking up any further time. I think we understand it. The position of the Senator seems to be that if the Comptroller of the Currency can not get the kind of a law that he wants and the kind that he drafted, he is willing to take anything on earth that is not related to it so that he gets some kind of a law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; the Comptroller has one object, and that one object is to make overdrafts as few and as small in amount as possible. This provision does that, and for that reason, it seems to me, it ought to be adopted. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on official business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. KIRBY. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the substitute for section 2 be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report it.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 2 as printed in the bill and substitute the following:

SEC. 2. In any case in which overdrafts are permitted by the directors or officers of national banks the directors or officers permitting such overdrafts shall be personally liable for any loss resulting therefrom, and where such overdrafts are not authorized by the directors or officers of a national bank the employee paying the check or checks of a depositor whose balance is insufficient to cover the amount of such check or checks shall be personally liable for any loss that results therefrom.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] very well pointed out what seems to me to be the relative necessity of this legislation. The provision which has just been offered as a substitute for what was in the bill is so different from the original proposition that it entirely changes the bill's characteristics. I think the evil arising from overdrafts has been very greatly exaggerated. It is true that years ago banks in some sections of the country were in the custom of loaning money and carrying the loans as overdrafts instead of taking notes. I have known of very large loans made in that way, and that was a matter of agreement between the bank and the bank customer. That system has been practically given up, so far as I know.

On the other hand, there are conditions which arise which necessarily require an overdraft. For example, a country bank may wish to borrow of its reserve city correspondent. It calls on the telephone and borrows $50,000 or $25,000, or whatever the amount may be, and the money is immediately put to the credit of the country bank, which then forwards its security and its note and draws for its needs. It overdraws its account, and this could not be done without a personal responsibility even under the provision which has been introduced by the Senator from Utah, thereby greatly interfering with the expedition of business.

Moreover, everybody knows that there are constant overdrafts of banks in small amounts. Very often people do not carry their bank balance correctly on their own check books, and frequently it would be an extremely embarrassing thing to throw out a check drawn by a good depositor—a check which should be paid and paid promptly, but which would produce an overdraft.

There may be some, but I do not recall any testimony which indicates that there have been serious results arising from overdrafts in producing failures of banks, but if it has been done it has been done as an error of judgment, not as an error of policy, because no officer of a bank would permit an overdraft of any size unless he were willing to loan the person making the overdraft that amount of money on his promissory note.

In every well-regulated bank the overdraft will appear on the books of the bank, and in the morning there is reported to the president or the proper officer of the bank the total amount of the overdraft. There is not anything about it that is not open and businesslike in banks that are properly run.

I think myself that this bill is largely of a camouflage order, and that it is a mistake for us to be legislating in matters of this kind, putting statutes on the statute books which are not necessary and which will not produce any reasonably beneficial results.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] substantially in what he has said. The fact that very frequently a loan by a bank by way of an occasional overdraft where the depositors are not keeping a close account is one of the safest assets of the bank, much safer than an ordinary piece of paper, because a man can be made to settle at once. All you have got to do is to call upon him and he must come or lose his credit. It is not like carrying a few days beyond the grace a promissory note and all that.

Now, just to illustrate, Mr. President, during the entire last year there was hardly a month went by without my overdrawing my Washington bank account. The man at the bank would call me on the phone or write and say, "Mr. WILLIAMS, that last check has overdrawn your balance $10"—sometimes $5, $20 in one or two cases, and I remember over $110. Immediately back would go a check sent by me upon another bank, in which I knew I had a balance, to meet the draft, or else a draft upon the Secretary of the Senate, payable on the next pay day, to be discounted and the net proceeds placed to my credit.

Most people are not running a commercial business. I am not running one. I can not go to keeping books with anybody, not even my bank. The bank knows I am good; all the banks I deal with do, and they are not afraid of my overdrawing $10 or $100.

It is absolute folly to try to make it appear that a bank is committing some fault, or that I am, merely because I do not keep books. I never kept a set of books in my life, and I do not expect to do it. I do not intend to be worried by that sort of thing. I hope to die without having experienced that nuisance. I would quit doing business with any bank in the world that turned down my draft because I had overdrawn my account when it knew that all it had to do was to let me know and it would get its $10 or $100.

As the Senator from Massachusetts said, I do not see much in this one way or the other. The bill does not provide a penalty for an overdraft. It merely provides that there shall be a list and the list shall be published. Whenever any bank carries on anything like good business, if there is any overdraft that has been extended and the man who has made the overdraft did not pay it is reported right away to the bank, and they come back to you, and it requires no law for them to do it.

There is one law of business for a commercial man, a trader, a bookkeeper, and there is another law of business for an ordinary fellow who is neither. I object to being put in the attitude of seeming to try to violate some commercial principle because I accidentally overdraw my account in a bank. It happens to me very frequently. It happened month before last. All I did was to draw a check upon the bank of Yazoo City to fill out the overdraft upon the bank here and sent it right down as soon as they phoned me from the bank.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] said he does not think much loss is occasioned by overdrafts. I had a talk with the comptroller this morning, and he says it is one of the strong reasons why banks fail. He says it is not only the overdraft at the time, but that the party who makes the overdraft often covers it up with a note afterwards, and a great many worthless notes are treated in the report as bad notes that were forced on the banks by reason of making an overdraft. In this circular, which is issued by the Comptroller of the Currency, the national banks of the country report an actual amount of losses which they charged off during the calendar years 1912, 1913, and 1914 on account of overdrafts of $1,209,000.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that the principle of overdrawing is wrong. The substitute which I have offered, though it permits overdrafts, does it only when it is recommended or approved by the board of directors, or if the paying teller fails to get an indorsement, then he becomes personally liable. I will state to the Senator that instances have been cited to me where the directors themselves did not want the other directors to know that they were overdrawing.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yeld to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In just a moment. I refer to cases where the director has borrowed all the money that he could under the law and has then arranged with the paying teller to make an overdraft that would be carried by the bank. The comptroller says that there are a large number of banks that do not have overdrafts presented to them every time directors meet for their approval or disapproval. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado what the total business of the national banks of the country was last year?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know; but a great many dollars.

Mr. WEEKS. What was the total amount of the overdrafts on national banks last year? If it is a fact that a million and a quarter were lost by overdraft, I want to see what percentage that was of the total business done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is a small percentage; there is not any doubt about that, but it is one of the leaks that ought to be prevented. Great many of the banks are conducted in a most admirable way, and there is no doubt that overdrafts in many of the banks are made good; but if you take banks that are organized which contain sometimes directors who have not the good of the people at heart, but their own interest at heart, it seems to me it will prevent these overdrafts and thereby save losses to the banks.

Overdrafts are considered illegal, and when you do not prohibit them absolutely there ought to be the greatest amount of care exercised in the way of getting the consent of the directors who know the party as to whether an overdraft will be paid.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado if he knows the amount of losses charged off on bad loans last year?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not so great a percentage of the business done, but that is probably the cause that is assigned more particularly for the failure of banks. As the comptroller said to me, a great many of the notes that are declared to be bad notes have been made by overdrafts in the first instance, and he says for that reason you can not ascertain how many banks have failed through overdraft.

Mr. WEEKS. Is it not true that the losses from overdrafts and from bad loans are due to bad banking and bad judgment, and that the correction for this whole thing would be for the stockholders of the bank to have suitable directors and suitable officers of the bank?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is one of the remedies, of course. There is no doubt but that if the banks permit overdrafts, unless they are absolutely sure of return, they will lose money, and consequently many banks become in time insolvent. But there are bank failures. They are going on. They are fewer than they used to be, it is true, but the failures, in some instances, are due to the fact that legislation of this kind has not been passed, and when the evil appears it is proper and right that the correction should be made.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If it is the purpose of the Senator to protect banks from extending credit to unreliable or insolvent patrons, why does he not throw the protecting arm of the Government around houses of merchandise in the matter of extending credit?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The banking system consists of extending credits. That is one of the means, and the policy is to allow credit only where credit is proper to be allowed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, this undertaking, it strikes me, by legislation to control the management of the private affairs of a quasi-public enterprise—I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks the rule which prevents a Senator from voting on a matter in which the Senator is personally interested should apply in the case of Senators who vote for or against this bill? I hope it will not affect the rights of Senators who happen to have overdrafts.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it seems to me it is a question for the future.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It seems to me it may not be necessary to tie the hands of a banker by legislation to prevent that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope that neither the provision of the bill or the amendment will obtain. I like the provision of the bill very much better than the substitute, and if either is adopted I hope it will be the provision in the original bill. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] suggests to me that each is worse than the other. Both are bad.

This is another illustration, Mr. President, of an attempt to interfere with the well-established course of business in this country. I have not myself had any complaint from any banker in my State against the custom of paying overdrafts. I have not received any suggestion from any constituent or from anyone else in this country with reference to the loss occurring to the banks of the country through this universal practice of allowing overdrafts.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] asks what percentage of the total deposits of banking capital was lost as the result of overdrafts. I have no personal information myself about it, but I heard a Senator, who claims to have made some investigations only a short time ago, this morning say, as I recall it, that it was only about 60 cents upon a thousand dollars. But, however that may be, assuming that it is a million dollars a year, as stated by the Senator from Colorado, that is a mere bagatelle compared to the enormous amount of business of all the banks of the country. It is an insignificant amount compared with the convenience and the advantage to the public of being permitted occasionally to overdraw their accounts in a bank to the extent of a few dollars or a few hundred dollars.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr SHAFROTH. I ask the Senator whether he thinks that anything has been done wrong by the State of Kansas and the State of North Dakota in passing this law as to State banks?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not think that there is any wrong in it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me read it:

> Any bank officer or employee who pays out the funds of the bank on the order of one who has not on deposit a sum equal to the check is personally liable to the bank for the amount paid.

Can it be possible that there is any wrong in that? That is exactly what is being done in this section.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not saying that there is any wrong in it, but I am saying that it is a condition of business that does not require any such remedy or any such interference as the bill proposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that there are 15 or 16 States that deemed it proper to pass such laws as that with relation to personal liability as to the man who pays an overdraft.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not complaining of any State in the United States that may see fit to pass a law of that sort. I am happy to say that my State has never seen fit to do it, and I hope it will never see fit to do it; but whatever may happen with reference to a few States in the Union in regard to State banks, I do not think it should be accepted by us as a question for our action in passing legislation to apply to every national bank in the country.

Mr. President, I can not conceive of anything that could be done that would work so many little hardships to the vast army of bank depositors in this country as would this legislation. Everybody understands that it is the ordinary custom of business in most of the States of this Union to honor checks of such part of their depositors as the bank officials have confidence in. Honoring a check when there is no funds with which to meet it is tantamount to a loan to that extent; and no bank officer would indulge a depositor in that way unless he felt that his bank would be willing to loan him that amount of money. There are a great many people who have to do their business upon a very small margin of capital; they do not carry large amounts in the bank. They, however, draw upon the bank freely, knowing their credit is good with the bank, knowing that there is no suspicion that they will not make good an overdraft. So they very frequently overdraw. To now say to those men that, if they issue a check which it may be important to the man to whom they have given it to have the money upon it immediately, such a check will be discredited at the bank if it happens to turn out that the drawer has inadvertently overdrawn his account for even a few cents, would be doing something which, to my mind, would in a small way result in such inconvenience as nothing else we might do as to a large percentage of the great mass of depositors in this country.

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say in a general way. The bill, as I understand, provides that this penalty shall only be imposed where the law of the State as it applies to State banks provides against overdrafts. Therefore in States like mine, where there is no such law, the provision in the bill would not apply, but would only apply in case a State has seen fit to impose a penalty for an overdraft or to prohibit overdrafts. The substitute, however, in effect would make the provision apply to every State in the Union, whether the State has such a law prohibiting an overdraft or not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall do so in a moment. That is to say, it would impose such penalties, if an overdraft be permitted, which would be tantamount to an absolute prohibition against the paying of an overdraft.

Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question. As I understood him, in the first place, he said that he was opposed to this section as reported to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I said I was opposed to the section as reported to the Senate in the original bill, and that I was opposed to the substitute; but as between the two, I should prefer the provision in the original bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator had said that. Therefore, I was going to call the Senator's attention to the fact that section 2, as now reported, simply means that national banks are placed under the law of the States on the subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I stated just before the Senator from Utah interrupted me; that, under the provisions of the original bill, it would only apply to States that had laws against overdraft.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I do not understand that to be so as to the substitute that is offered. That would apply to all the States of the Union.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; so far as the substitute goes it would.

Mr. SIMMONS. It would apply so far as the substitute goes. Mr. President, I hope the substitute will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did intend to offer an amendment to strike out section 2 of the bill, but I am not going to do so. I ask the Senate to vote upon the bill. I think the Senate is convinced that this class of legislation is absolutely uncalled for and unnecessary.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let us vote, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was rejected.

RENT PROFITEERING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill be first read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not had time even to read the bill, because I have been so extremely busy; but I am not going to ask that it be delayed any longer than a sufficient time for me to look into it. If the Senator from Ohio will postpone his request until to-morrow, I assure him that I shall not offer any obstruction, but I do want to examine the bill. I assume that it is the so-called profiteering bill.

Mr. POMERENE. It is. Mr. President, I understand it is the purpose to take up the Post Office appropriation bill a little later. I am extremely anxious to have the legislation, the consideration of which I have asked, disposed of. At the same time, I realize that the request of the Senator from New Hampshire is not an unreasonable request.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I did read the House bill on this subject; but the Senate bill is an entirely different bill, I assume?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I do want to read the Senate bill and to compare it with the House measure.

Mr. POMERENE. The bill as reported by the Senate committee is entirely different from the House bill, and is constructed on an entirely different plan. The House bill seeks to control the situation by a tax on incomes from real estate, while in the bill which is reported by the Senate District Committee we seek to limit rentals to a net rental of 7 per cent, with certain, we think, very efficacious regulations.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a very important bill, and if the Senator from Ohio will move to take it up after the routine morning business to-morrow, I do not believe there will be any objection. I should not object, certainly; but I should like time to read the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Is there objection to my asking now that the Senate make this bill a special order for to-morrow?

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not ask that it be taken up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think if the Senator from Ohio should give notice to that effect, it would be just the same.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why not take the bill up now, with the understanding that it be laid aside for the remainder of the day, by unanimous consent?

Mr. POMERENE. I am quite willing that that shall be done, if that will suit the purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am quite willing that that shall be the procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will now be laid before the Senate, and then laid aside temporarily until to-morrow. Is that the idea?

Mr. POMERENE. That it shall be laid aside until to-morrow at the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. BANKHEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a bill which has been on the calendar for some time; I refer to the bill (S. 2104) to amend sections 4402, 4404, and 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending matter has not yet been disposed of. The Chair assumes that neither the Senator from Alabama nor the Senator from Florida desired to object?

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, has the Senate taken up the District profiteering bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; and has laid it aside.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There was not any formal action on it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Chair put the question.

Mr. POMERENE. I assume the bill was taken up by common consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order was made.

Mr. POMERENE. And that the bill is laid aside until to-morrow at the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state his inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the request of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] prevails, does it make his bill the special order for to-morrow? Is that the idea?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. GALLINGER. It makes it the unfinished business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I am compelled to object. I am anxious to get up the Post Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator's objection comes too late.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My objection does not come too late. I think the question has never been submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood he asked if there was objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio, but none was made. If that, however, is not the case, and the Senator from Alabama desires to object to the request——

Mr. POMERENE. I want to appeal to the Senator from Alabama. I realize his anxiety to get up the Post Office appropriation bill. That bill ought to be disposed of at the earliest possible moment; but that bill provides for the ensuing year, while the bill which I desire considered is for the immediate relief of the people of this District, and serious harm may befall citizens of the District if some final and definite action is not taken upon it by the Congress of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the request.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7237, Calendar No. 318, commonly called the Post Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7237.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question. I am afraid, while I am trying to be diligent in the matter of legislation, that I am losing track of some matters that are being speeded a little faster than I can travel. I will ask the Senator when this appropriation bill was reported?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It has been on the calendar for three or four weeks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was reported on April 2.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; I think the Senator ought to call it up.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am entirely anxious to accommodate myself to the views of the Senator from Ohio, in charge of the so-called rent-profiteering bill; but the Post Office appropriation bill is also an important measure. I wish to make the suggestion that, perhaps, to-morrow during the morning hour the Senator from Ohio might get his bill up and have it considered. I would not undertake to interfere with an arrangement like that.

Mr. POMERENE. If we can have an understanding that the Senator will consent to lay aside, even after the morning hour, the Post Office appropriation bill——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not agree to lay it aside beyond the morning hour.

Mr. POMERENE. I am quite sure there is no disposition on the part of any member of the District Committee to unduly prolong the debate on the so-called rent-profiteering bill; but it is a matter of immediate necessity to the people of the District, whereas so far as appropriations which are provided for in the Post Office appropriation bill are concerned they are for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but the bill must be passed by the 30th of June.

Mr. POMERENE. I think we will be able to get it through before that time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And then it will have to go to conference, and we do not know how long the conference will take. I think we might proceed with this bill this afternoon, and then I have no doubt some arrangement can be made by which the Senator from Ohio can at least proceed with his bill to-morrow during the morning hour.

Mr. POMERENE. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I am going to place absolute confidence in his generosity and good will for to-morrow, so that we will be able then to take up the rent-profiteering bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7237, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendments, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that the Finance Committee are holding a meeting, and the members of that committee are asked to be present to take action upon a special matter pending there. There are some amendments to the Post Office appropriation bill in which I know members of that committee are very deeply interested; and I was going to ask the Senator if he would not permit the bill to be read through now for committee amendments, allowing such amendments as to which he knows there is no objection to be agreed to, and as to other amendments—I think the Senator knows the amendments I have in mind——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think I do.

Mr. SMOOT. To ask that they be passed over, at least until we can return from the committee meeting?

Mr. BANKHEAD. When we come to an amendment which is likely to provoke debate, I will ask that it may be passed over and printed, if that is the desire.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not ask that they be printed, but I ask that the amendment in regard to the pneumatic tubes, the amendment increasing salaries of rural carriers, and other amendments to which the Senator knows there is objection, may be passed over. Those amendments as to which the Senator knows there is a question I should not like to have acted upon this afternoon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the understanding, Mr. President. If we reach an amendment of that sort, it will be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Postmaster General," on page 2, line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$783,700" and insert "$901,255," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to postmasters, $35,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

And the appointment and assignment of assistant postmasters hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum

The amendment was agreed to:

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 22, after the words "in all," to strike out "$53,291,800" and insert "$61,285,570," so as to make the clause read:

And to provide for the promotion of 85 per cent of the clerks in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, and for the promotion of 15 per cent of the clerks in the sixth grade to the designation of "special clerk," in the $1,300 grade, and for the promotion of 15 per cent of the designated "special clerks" in the $1,300 grade to the designation of "special clerk" in the $1,400 grade, and to provide for the promotion of 85 per cent of the clerks in second-class post offices from the fourth to the fifth grade, and for the promotion of 15 per cent of the clerks in second-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade: And provided further, That there may also be employed at first-class post offices foremen and stenographers at a salary of $1,300 or more per annum; in all, $61,285,570.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 3, on page 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the "$2,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 12, line 4, after the word "That," to insert "hereafter," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That hereafter no allowance in excess of $300 shall be made where the salary of the postmaster is $1,000, $1,100, or $1,200; nor in excess of $400 where the salary of the postmaster is $1,300, $1,400, or $1,500; and that no allowance in excess of $500 shall be made where the salary of the postmaster is $1,600 or $1,700; nor in excess of $800 where the salary of the postmaster is $1,800 or $1,900.

Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster General may, in the disbursement of the appropriation for such purposes, apply a part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for the use of post offices of the first, second, and third classes at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly for a term not exceeding 10 years; and that there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post office for rent a sum in excess of $500, nor more than $100 for fuel and light in any one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 14, after the word "established," to strike out "$4,100,000" and insert "$4,685,715," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of substitutes for letter carriers absent with pay, and of auxiliary and temporary letter carriers at offices where city delivery is already established, $4,685,715.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 22, in the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to strike out "$6,500,000" and insert "$6,700,000: Provided, That not to exceed $200,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for the payment of the service contemplated by the appropriation title during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918"; and at the end of line 22, on page 13, strike out the comma and insert the word "further."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 14, after line 13, to insert:

For the transmission of mails by pneumatic tube, $976,000, of which amount $500,000 shall be available for operation by the Post Office Department.

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to take over and operate on and after July 1, 1918, at least to the extent pneumatic-tube mail service is now maintained, the pneumatic-tube systems now under contract with the Post Office Department in the cities of New York, N. Y.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Boston, Mass.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; and St. Louis, Mo., together with all equipment, properties, supplies, franchises, street rights, and patent licenses, so far as the same apply to and are necessary for pneumatic-tube mail service: Provided, That before taking over and operating the tubes in any of said cities arrangements shall be made whereby the Post Office Department shall be relieved of the payment of any license or franchise tax to any of said cities during the time of Government operation.

There shall be paid for said properties not more than $4,432,622, the exact amount to be determined as follows: On or before July 1, 1918, from available data and information and such additional investigation as it may deem necessary to make, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall ascertain, determine, and report to the Postmaster General the actual value of the said properties in each of the said cities to be taken over by the Postmaster General, taking into consideration the nature, character, and condition of the franchises, patent licenses, and the titles to the properties in each of said cities.

The Interstate Commerce Commission shall also report to the Postmaster General a plan of amortization for the payment of the amount to be determined by it as the value of the said properties, in no event to exceed $4,432,622, under which not less than $476,000 per annum shall be applied to the payment of the principal and interest at 4 per cent per annum for a sufficient period of years to pay the owners of the tube properties the amount so determined by the said commission as the value of the same.

Of the amount herein appropriated $476,000 shall be paid to the owners of the tube properties on July 1, 1918, and $476,000 shall be paid on the 1st of July each year thereafter in the manner herein provided until the total value, as determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, together with 4 per cent on unpaid balances, shall have been paid. The value of the properties so determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the system in each of said cities shall be paid to the owners thereof, in the manner herein provided, in the proportion such valuations shall bear to the total valuation so fixed.

Said Interstate Commerce Commission shall permit hearings both to the Postmaster General and his representatives and the owners of the tube properties and their representatives as it shall deem proper.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That amendment relates to pneumatic-tube service, and I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask to return to line 1, on page 14, where I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, after the word "service," in line 1, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

$2,700,000: Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for payment of the service contemplated by the appropriation title during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 17, line 2, after "$1,185,000," to insert:

Provided, That the contract now in force for carrying the mail on Lake Winnepesaukee, N. H., shall be readjusted so that the yearly salary paid the carrier, who furnishes his own equipment, shall be $1,800 per annum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer an amendment to the amendment to come in after the words "per annum" in line 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 6, after the words "per annum," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That hereafter when there is no competition on a route and the rate of compensation asked is excessive or no proposal is received, he may require that the mails be carried as freight or express, and it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by water to refuse to carry the mails when so required, and the penalty for such offense shall be a fine of $500; each day of refusal shall constitute a separate offense.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator having this bill in charge permit an inquiry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. When I was in the Hawaiian Islands recently I was told that there was a steamboat company that had a monopoly of the transportation not only of passengers but of freight. There was apprehension that this company might charge extortionate rates for carrying the mails, and it was claimed that they have been charging extravagant rates for carrying freight. Will the amendment which the Senator has just tendered cover a case of that kind, so that arrangements may be made to deal with a situation of that character?

Mr. BANKHEAD. This amendment was prepared by the Post Office Department expressly to cover a case like that mentioned by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am very glad that the matter has received attention at the hands of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was prepared for that purpose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama whether it would not be better, instead of making it a direct penalty of $500, to say "not exceeding $500," or at least to make it a smaller amount than that, as long as we are going to constitute each day a distinct and separate offense?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should not like to make it any smaller, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. You have got to have a definite sum.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be; but it seems to me that a penalty of $500 for each day of failure to comply would be a pretty large penalty to be imposed, for which he might have some kind of an excuse that was reasonably valid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I figure that in a case like this it would be construed to mean that the larger included the lesser, and they would not impose an extortionate fine. They ought to be permitted to make the fine that amount if it is necessary, and I think they can make it less under the provisions of this law if they deem that the circumstances of the case justify it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to make one other inquiry of the Senator. I notice that the appropriation referred to in the section just read provides for the carrying of mail by airplanes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator whether or not the investigations of the committee justify the embarkation by the Government now upon a scheme to employ airplanes in carrying the mails? It seems to me that at this time, and in view of the unstable condition of aeronautics, it is a visionary, utopian, and absurd plan to utilize aircraft for use in transmitting mail matter. We are in war and we have been unable, notwithstanding the tremendous amount expended, to provide sufficient airplanes for the training of our soldiers and for doing our full duty upon the battle fields of France. To dissipate any of our energies now in the construction of airplanes for the purpose of carrying mail would be, in my opinion, not only imprudent, but it would be carrying absurdity to the most absurd limits.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, of course the committee were compelled to take the opinion of the officials of the Post Office Department on this question, they having made a thorough examination, as they state; but the fact remains that we have been appropriating for this purpose in the last two appropriation bills, and this provision also provides that these planes shall be secured from the Government, those that have heretofore been used by the Army and have been discarded and are not now used for military purposes. I do not think the provision contemplates the building or buying of new airplanes. It is true that this is something of an experiment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think if the department has given such information to the committee it must be through an error, because I myself have seen, at the Curtiss plant at Buffalo, new planes being made for the Post Office Department.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think they intend to use them between here and New York. That is to be paid for out of the limited appropriation they have for that purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Post Office Department undoubtedly is building new planes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, quite likely they are building a few. I think they have a small appropriation for that purpose, but they did not contemplate——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that the proposed amendment to the amendment uses the word "he" without anything shortly theretofore showing to whom reference is made, and the Chair suggests that the amendment read "the Postmaster General," instead of "he."

Mr. BANKHEAD. "The Postmaster General" is what it ought to be.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "he" and insert "the Postmaster General."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. KING. If there were any way by which the amount of the appropriation which is to be devoted to airplane service could be segregated from the residue of the amount, I should move to strike out from the appropriation bill the former sum.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, can not the Senator do that—I hope he will—by moving to strike out the language on page 17, beginning at line 7 and running down to line 15?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before we get to that, without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and, without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to. That does not affect this provision, as the Chair understands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama what portion of this $1,185,000 is to be devoted to this ill-advised scheme of utilizing aircraft for carrying mail?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think if the Senator will read the provision he will find that the expenditure for this purpose is limited to $100,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 will show it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill by striking out on line 2, page 17, the words "or by airplanes"; and if that amendment shall prevail, I shall move later to strike out, in line 8——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me, if he wants to make that amendment, he would have to strike out the next to the last proviso as a whole; and then he would have to change the total accordingly after he has done that.

Mr. KING Where it reads "Provided further"?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. All of that is part of the same proposition.

Mr. KING. That is, commencing on line 6?

Mr. HARDWICK. Commencing on line 6 with the words "Provided further" and going down to the next "Provided further," in line 11.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator from Georgia for inviting my attention to the words at a different place in the paragraph, and which should also be stricken out if the amendment first suggested is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, in line 2, on page 17, the words "or by airplanes"; also, beginning with the words "Provided further," at the end of line 6, to strike out all down to and including the word "determine," on line 11, in the following words:

Provided further, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes for an experimental aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine.

Mr. KING. I submit, Mr. President, as an amendment the striking out of the words just read by the Secretary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, as I stated a while ago, for two or three years we have been appropriating $100,000 for this experimental service. The principal purpose of this is to experiment in Alaska and to use airplanes in Alaska if they find they are practicable, where the cost of carrying the mails by boat or by overland transportation is simply out of the question. You have got to substitute something for it, or you can not afford to pay the cost of carrying the mails.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this small sum of $100,000 should be appropriated, the purpose being to experiment, if further experimentation is necessary, and determine whether or not the mails, in certain sections and over certain routes where it is impracticable, where the cost is outrageous, to transport them by the usual methods, can not be carried by airplane at a much less cost. That is the sole purpose of the provision. I do not think it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator to state a few moments ago, and before the suggestion was made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], that some appropriation had been made for aeroplane mail service between here and New York City. I want to ask the Senator whether any part of the appropriation carried in this bill is for that service?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. The only thing in this bill which pertains to airplane service between here and New York is the provision that the Postmaster General may charge 24 cents a letter. That is all that relates to the airplane service between here and New York. They are getting ready now to proceed with that service. I do not know where they have gotten their airplanes, or anything about it, but they seem to have gotten them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator where the Post Office Department has obtained the money with which to construct airplanes to operate between here and New York City?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will yield to me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. We passed legislation authorizing them to get condemned airplanes from the War and Navy Departments, where they were no longer used for military purposes, and could be furnished by those departments to the Post Office Department. They were not practicable for the uses of the other departments. I think that is what they are operating with now.

Mr. KING. Then, if the statement of the Senator from New York is accurate—and I have no doubt but what it is—that the Curtiss factory is now making new machines for the carrying of mails, as I understood him, between here and New York, the department is exceeding its authority.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think that is the fact. Is the Senator certain of that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have seen the planes in the course of manufacture myself.

Mr. HARDWICK. For the Post Office Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. For the Post Office Department.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then it must be intended that they are to be paid for out of this $100,000 appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If that is the case, under what authority did the Postmaster General let the contract?

Mr. HARDWICK. I could not tell the Senator about that. I do not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that, as I understand, there was a like provision in the bill of last year.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator pleases, the same provision has been carried in the bill for two or three years, and there has been a current annual appropriation of $100,000 for experimental purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When the Senator used the expression "this appropriation," I thought he meant the one made in this bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I mean this same $100,000 appropriation which was in last year's bill. I can refer the Senator to the bill of last year in exactly the same language, and exactly the same amount was carried. So that if the Postmaster General has obtained airplanes from the Curtiss Co. he has done it out of a similar appropriation for last year, as he might do, of course, to the extent of $100,000 out of the appropriation carried by this bill, if this bill should pass.

I do not want to keep the floor very long, because it looks to me like this is a meritorious proposition. The progress of science is so great in some of these fields that the Post Office officials feel that they ought to adapt themselves to its progress. There are portions of Alaska, as the chairman of the committee pointed out, where they carry mail by sledge or by dogs at very great expense and by boats at very great expense. We adopted an amendment here just now that was necessitated largely by the situation in Alaska, where there is practically no competition among some of these boats that go away up in the recesses of the country, and where they are charging eight and nine times as much as they charge for the highest-class express, because there is no competition, and they can force the Government to pay what they charge. We are trying to remedy that; but it does seem to me that in this enlightened age, when certainly under some circumstances airplanes can be used to carry mail or anything else to a certain amount of weight, it is wise to let the Postmaster General continue these experiments and use, in a small way, money for this purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that this appropriation has been carried in the bill for two or three years?

Mr. HARDWICK. Two or three years; yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What has been done in the way of experiment? How many machines has the Post Office Department?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am informed that the fact is that only recently has the Post Office Department undertaken to have airplanes constructed under this appropriation; and possibly the Senator from New York refers to the first instance, as far as I know.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Have they used any discarded machines anywhere?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Where?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am sure they have used them in Alaska.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to know where in Alaska. I should like to know what the route is up there and what sort of landing places they have, and what they do when they land out in the forest somewhere.

Mr. HARDWICK. I imagine that an airplane could land in Alaska about as well as it could in Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are some landing places arranged for around here.

Mr. HARDWICK. They do not have to have artificial landing places for all of these airplanes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They can not land very safely anywhere; and, furthermore, they could not land around here anywhere without being pretty close to transportation facilities, while in Alaska they might land a long way from gasoline tanks or means of getting out, and the poor fellow who was operating the airplane might starve to death.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator very frankly that I do not know and can not give him the information about exactly where they have conducted these experiments. I know that the Post Office Department thinks that Alaska is probably the most useful field for experimentation of this sort.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They may be right in that, but it is the last place that I would pick out to experiment with airplanes.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator may differ with the department about that; but as far as I am concerned I can see no doubt about the advisability of letting the department use a very small part of the postal funds for purposes of experimentation of this kind.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know that I am questioning that, but I do think that the experiment ought to be carried on in a little bit safer field than they would have to operate in up in Alaska. Finding that this appropriation has been carried in the bill for two or three years, I was interested in knowing what they have actually done, because I have heard nothing about their having airplanes or using them anywhere.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think the truth is that they have done very little in this country. They have done some experimenting; but, as I understand, up to date it has been largely with the machines that were left to them by other departments, the War and Navy Departments, that were not serviceable or useful to those departments—not fighting machines; not adapted for fighting. There is quite a difference between a fighting machine and a commercial machine, as we have found out lately.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I have understood so; but it does seem to me that if they have had this money for two or three years we ought to know something about the kind of experiments they have carried on, and where they have carried them on, and what has become of the money that we have appropriated—what use has been made of it. I can see great possibilities in this service.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think the Senator is right. As a matter of fact, while the appropriation has been carried several years just in this amount, of course it came out of the postal funds, and the Postmaster General has used very little of it. He has made some few experiments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It did strike me very forcibly when the suggestion was made that we were using these airplanes up in Alaska. I know that the transportation facilities there are very inadequate and I know they are very expensive; but it is pretty hard for me to conceive of having airplanes take the place of boats and other facilities up in that country.

Mr. HARDWICK. I must confess that I do not know about that. I do not know much about this airplane business except what I read in the newspapers; but the department thinks there is some future for it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also question the advisability of the Post Office Department experimenting with discarded machines. It seems to me they ought to have just about as good and safe machines as possible; and that is especially true if they are going sailing over the mountains and forests and waters of Alaska.

Mr. HARDWICK. They are perfectly safe, but for one or another technical reason, which I can not undertake to give to the Senator, they are not considered adapted for fighting purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that a schedule of airplane mail service has been arranged between Washington and New York, and it is to begin on the 15th of this month. They are to make stops at Baltimore and Philadelphia, and I believe only at those places, between here and New York. The amount of this appropriation that the Senator speaks of that has been expended I should say has gone into that arrangement or to prepare for this service; and in this bill we have authorized them to charge 24 cents a letter between here and New York. Of course, a man can take his choice. He can send his mail either by airplane or in the regular way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say to the Senator that I can very easily see how a route of this kind could be established between here and the city of New York and be a very safe one, too. I should like to go on it myself with a good man.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We will arrange for the Senator to make the trip.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should enjoy it very much; but a route between here and New York is quite different from a route between some points in Alaska.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

I just want to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is the author of the amendment to strike out the airplane provision, to the fact that objections of this kind have uniformly been made, and frequently by our ablest and most distinguished men, to new discoveries and inventions of this kind and to progressive measures generally. I think it was no less a person than Mr. Webster who, on the floor of this Senate, about 1830, said that he would vote against any appropriation to be used for any purpose for the improvement of anything beyond the Mississippi River, on the ground that the great West was a desert waste and never could be used by this country. Now, we read the statements of the men who opposed those things in those days and we wonder how it was that with their great reputations they were men who did not have more perspective or insight into the future, to say the least; and in the years to come I have no doubt that the distinguished Senator from Utah will be referred to by others, just as I am referring to Mr. Webster now, in the very same way. I can say to the Senator that I believe that he is just standing across the path of progress.

Why, as young a man as I am, I remember distinctly when it was considered that the telephone was a toy and that it had no real use or advantage, and later on the automobile was considered a toy that would never be of any practical benefit; and yet the world could hardly get along to-day without telephones and automobiles. The telegraph, the ocean cable, the electric light, the electric motor, the moving picture, and numberless other improvements had the same history. And so it is with airships. I have no doubt that the time will come when we will use them for a hundred different purposes and that the world will feel that it could hardly get along without them.

I hope the Senator will not interpose an objection to this very worthy measure, as it seems to me. It may be that the money may not bring full results the first year or the second year or even the third year, but the time will come when results will be shown by reason of these experiments. Why, the time will come when we will use airplanes just as frequently as we now use automobiles, in my judgment, and there may be inventions in the future that will far surpass them. We can not afford to take chances on it if we want to help develop things of this kind and make them the best for our country; and I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is assuming the rôle of a prophet to-day. It was stated by the great prophet of old, that "without vision the people perish." Prophecy did not cease when Malachi, the last of the prophets of the Old Testament, gave his words to an unwilling world.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not refer to me as a contemporary of the prophet Malachi. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President; the amiable and able Senator has the flower of youth upon his brow; I was assigning to him a distinguished position in associating his name with the prophets of old. We all know the great service rendered by those who have spoken with the voice of prophetic inspiration. Prophets have been those who saw into the future, pointed the path of duty, and indicated impending dangers. All great leaders have been prophets. Humanity has advanced in proportion to the broad vision and prophetic power of men upon whom the mantle of Providence rested. Great political leaders have looked with prophetic vision into the future, and the great statesman is the one who glimpses the mighty events which the future holds within her grasp. Poets, too, have been prophets, and they, like Tennyson—

> Dipped into the future far as human eye could see,
> Saw the visions of the world and all the wonders that would be,
> Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
> Pilots of the purple twilight dropping down their golden bales.

So the great poet of England, more than half a century ago, foretold that above the clouds the commerce of the world, in part, would be carried upon ships not baptized in oceans deep.

I am glad to know that my distinguished friend looks beyond the present hour and seeks to read the future and to meet its mighty problems. There is need of prophets and of vision here in this Chamber, in the activities of the Government. We need prophets here to challenge attention to the staggering expenditures which are being made and to the inevitable consequences that will flow therefrom. We need voices to cry out against improvident expenditures, against unwarranted appropriations that are often made. The task of the economist in legislative bodies is always a difficult and an undesirable one. It is so easy to pass laws appropriating money; there are always a multitude of people willing to receive in every quarter gifts and bounties and gratuities and appropriations. Even in times of peace the man who seeks to protect the public treasury becomes unpopular, and in times of war, where public attention is riveted upon great struggles upon land and sea, and all eyes are looking to great issues which perhaps involve the life of nations, and the cause of civilization itself, any plea for economy and providence in expenditures falls upon deaf ears.

In this world war figures have become meaningless. We cease to speak of thousands, or hundreds of thousands, even. The man upon the street as well as the one in public service speaks of hundreds of millions and billions. So a hundred thousand dollars for an experiment for some fad or some utopian plan causes no comment; indeed, attracts no attention. And if objection is interposed to an appropriation for one hundred thousand dollars or a million dollars or a hundred million dollars it excites derision, and the objector is denominated a "mossback."

However, the criticism of my distinguished friend loses something of its sting because he tempers it with the asservation that I remind him of Daniel Webster. So in the years that are to come it is possible I may live in history, because in this august body my name has been coupled with the great and immortal statesman, Daniel Webster, and that standing with Webster I opposed things essential to progress and conducive to the cause of civilization.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KING. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are many points of similarity between the distinguished Senator from Utah and Daniel Webster; but I really think that on the occasion referred to, when he voted against the appropriation for Government improvements beyond the Mississippi River, that was one of Mr. Webster's signal failures to diagnose the future.

But that was not what I rose to say to the Senator. He speaks of this airplane mail service as being a fad. I happened to be acquainted with a lawsuit some time ago in my home town of Memphis, Tenn., involving a question with a telephone company, and that company dated back for its charter to a resolution on the minutes of the council meeting which referred to the telephone as "Carnes's toy." A far-visioned and progressive man by the name of Carnes had adopted this toy—this fad, if the Senator pleases to call it that—and received a contract from the city to operate it, and even the city fathers laughed at his fad; but Mr. Carnes was right, and the Senator sees and the whole world sees what we have in the telephone; and I say to the Senator that it does not take a prophet to see that something of real worth and of real merit is coming from airplane service in the future, just as it has already come from the telephone service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would be the last man in the world to depreciate the marvelous discoveries and inventions of our age. When we behold the achievements of the past century, and particularly the scientific discoveries of the past quarter of a century, it would seem that the very secrets of nature must be yielded up to men. The application of the principles of the physical sciences have almost revolutionized society and transformed the face of the globe. Our civilization must pay tribute to the mighty men of genius who have opened the rich pages of nature's volume and read to a wondering world of the mysteries and truths that have advanced humanity and builded our civilization. Our Nation has become great not alone because of the moral standards of our people but because they have been foremost in discoveries and inventions and in applying in a utilitarian way the principles which have been comprehended.

But some great discovery or invention may be profitable and advantageous in one field of endeavor, and to seek to utilize it in another would be attended with failure. The use of steam has revolutionized the world, but it would be a fad to seek to apply its use in certain activities. I have no doubt that when the science of aeronautics has been further developed aircraft will be used for many purposes. It is possible airplanes may be constructed for carrying a limited number of persons or for use commercially in a limited way, but I repeat that it is more or less of a fad to talk of carrying the mails by means of airplanes at the present time. We have—or, at least, we had before the Government took possession of the railroads—a splendid transportation system. Our railroads were among the best in the world. Our mail system was most excellent, and the transportation facilities afforded by the railroads and other carrying agencies linked our Nation together and served the people commercially, socially, and otherwise in a most effective and superior manner. There was no cry for more rapid mail service between Washington and New York, or between Washington and Chicago, or between the Atlantic and the Pacific. At any rate, there is no demand, while this great war is on, for appropriations for experimental purposes along these lines. The War Department is spending hundreds of millions of dollars experimentally to develop suitable aircraft. It seems ridiculous to me that the Post Office Department should be engaged in like experiments, but upon a scale so pitiably small that no results except failures are possible.

But, Mr. President, recurring to the statement of the Senator concerning Daniel Webster's allusion to the West, as I recall, Mr. Webster did not declaim against all of the territory west of the Mississippi River, and did not, as I remember his speech, object to making appropriations for some purposes to be expended beyond the Mississippi. What he referred to were the arid wastes, the desolate lands of alkali and sand, the rugged mountains, supposed to be devoid of wealth or value, lying far beyond the Mississippi River. That part of our great domain was almost terra incognita; it was "the great American desert." Webster did speak disparagingly of it. His great mind was occupied in construing the Federal Constitution, in forging those mighty arguments which he so powerfully employed to prove that this was "an indestructible Union of indestructible States." His vision failed him when he looked into the great West. He did not see its possibilities. He did not appreciate its limitless wealth and its future contribution to the greatness of this Republic.

Years after Webster delivered the speech referred to by the Senator it was a perilous journey to go from the Mississippi River across the continent to the Pacific coast, and until the construction of the transcontinental railroad weeks and months were consumed in making such a journey. It was a trackless waste, dreary and dismal, and the bones of thousands of adventuresome and hardy pioneers bleached on the bleak and whitened plains. But the situation of that day is not paralleled by the conditions of this hour. To attempt to justify this legislation by a reference to the conditions in the time of Mr. Webster seems to me, with all due respect to my friend, a rather slender thread upon which to hang an argument.

Mr. President, the question of aeroplanes is not a new one, and yet everybody admits that airships and aircraft are just in the beginning of their development. We are now engaged in a great war. We are taxing the industries of the people. We are calling for every dollar that can be raised. We are spending not hundreds of millions but billions of dollars, and every dollar which we spend has to be raised by taxation or by bond issues. We will need perhaps more than eighteen to twenty billions of dollars to meet the obligations and to extend credit to our allies for the fiscal year of 1919. Where is this vast sum of money coming from? From taxation and by the issue of more bonds.

The policy which we are pursuing necessarily tends to expansion or to inflation, whatever term may be preferred, and as a result of that expansion and inflation prices are augmented until the burden of carrying on the war becomes staggering.

I submit, Mr. President, that not one dollar ought to be expended in this great crisis that is not imperatively demanded by the Government for some important purpose.

Mr. President, we are not now able to manufacture the aircraft that we require. We have boys who for months have been waiting in the various encampments for the purpose of receiving their instruction in flying, to the end that they might go beyond the sea and do something to preserve the liberties of this country and the civilization of the world. We have been unable to furnish them sufficient aeroplanes in order that they might be properly taught how to fly. We have hundreds of patriotic young men, eagerly waiting to serve their country, but they are helpless and impatiently cry out for opportunity to uphold their country's cause.

Why should we now expend any amount whatever for this experiment? We know that with the progress of the war the airplanes of to-day and to-morrow will soon be obsolete within the next few months or the next year or two. Indeed, it has been stated here by distinguished members of the Military Affairs Committee that the changes in aircraft are so many and occur so frequently that the machine of to-day is useless to-morrow. It is superseded by something superior, and some new invention or device compels the construction of planes of a different character or type.

Now it is proposed, when we can not build planes enough for military purposes and when their use is so essential to our country's safety, to engage in the foolish experiment of carrying mails from Washington to New York City with airplanes and to go into the frozen fields of Alaska and fly from icebergs to ice peaks. Mr. President, we have one of the best transportation systems in the world. We can carry mail from here to New York in four to six hours. What is the necessity for this scheme? Who is demanding it? Why dissipate our energies, squander our money in this experiment at this time, when all our resources ought to be devoted to the prosecution of the war?

I have no doubt that in years to come, and perhaps in the near future, we will be using airships for many purposes, perhaps carrying the mails; but certainly no reason appears now to justify the expenditure of one dollar for the purposes suggested by the gentlemen who are sponsors for this proposition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think that this provision is not designed to be used by the Post Office Department in trying to develop airplanes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, all I know about the provision is what the Postmaster General said. This appropriation, as I said before, has been carried for three years. It is a House provision. It was not put in by the Senate committee; it came from the House. It reads—

That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes for an experimental aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine.

That is all in the world that I know about it. I know that the representatives of the department appeared before the committee and said they regarded it as quite important, and they thought they would be able in some instances to prevent monopoly or to prevent combinations in bids, and all that sort of thing. That is all I know about it. We have been carrying the appropriation for three years. How much of it has been expended I do not know. They may have spent very little. If they are building airplanes at all, they are building them out of the unexpended appropriation that has heretofore been made for this purpose. It is not, as the Senator supposes, for experiments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the Senator misunderstood me. I said that, in my judgment, this money was not intended to be used by the Post Office Department in experimenting with airplanes or the development of airplanes, because if that were the purpose I would be utterly opposed to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think that is the purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I assume that it is not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the airplane itself has really passed the stage of experiment. It has been demonstrated as a pretty efficient agent for rapid transit, and before the war is over it will be brought to a very high state of development, in my judgment. More development will be brought about, of course, in the war activities than anybody could hope for through the instrumentality of any agency like the Post Office Department. So I assumed this money was not to enable them to experiment with airplanes and machines for the purpose of developing a more efficient machine, but that the purpose of the appropriation is to permit the department to use the services of airplanes in the transportation of mails, and in an experimental way to see whether it would pay or not, at what cost they can transport the mails, and what additional facilities that are needed will be brought to business through the use of airplanes.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, in other words, to see how the airplane can be adapted to the mail service. Let me say, while I am on my feet, that section 8 of the bill, on page 30, shows exactly what the object is. It provides—

That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, deliver and turn over to the Postmaster General from time to time, and without charge therefor, for use in the Postal Service, such aeroplanes and automobiles or parts thereof as may prove to be, or as shall become, unsuitable for the purposes of the War Department.

Then the section goes on to provide that the expenses shall be paid out of the very appropriation we have now under discussion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Just a word or two in reference to the other line of thought I was pursuing, and that is the development of airplanes. Of course, we saw the large machine that has been flying over the city and has an engine of 500 horsepower. It can carry a ton up in the air, and if it had seating facilities 10 or 12 persons could be carried in it. That machine is the smallest of that kind of machine. I am told by the representatives of the Italian Government, that they have; that they have other machines with a horsepower of 2,000 and with a capacity to carry 50 people. Of course, if you can carry a ton or 2 tons or 3 tons of mail, that amounts to considerable. So it seems to me the question comes down to whether, under the present conditions of things, we want to experiment in carrying the mail and whether there is any necessity for it. I confess that I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] with reference to that proposition. When the war is over we are going to have thousands of young men in this country who will be well trained in the handling of aeroplanes and we are going to have thousands of aeroplanes that can be used for various purposes. Then I think will be a good time to try the experiment and see whether or not the machines will prove useful in carrying mail.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will allow me, that will be the time, if it can be adapted to the Postal Service, to use it. When we are approaching that time as rapidly as we are, it is a good idea to see how well it is adapted for use when the time the Senator speaks of arrives, and we can then put in a service of that sort if we see fit to do it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But in regard to use at this time, what is the necessity for any faster mail service between the city of Washington and the city of New York now? If there is no necessity for a faster mail service, what success can you hope from a proposition of this kind that involves such a large charge for the carrying of a letter? If there is no necessity for it, if there is no demand for it, you might say that no special benefit can come to business or to individuals by having a more rapid mail transit.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think that practically there might be instances in which an expedition of even an hour or two or three hours might be important, particularly in war times, but this service in the end must rest on a very different basis. In spite of the Senator's opinion expressed just now, my judgment is that it will be very valuable in such places as Alaska, when they arrange for a landing and get the aeroplanes geared right to fly from one place to another and can land without hitting something, and out in the far West, where distances are vast.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I live in the far West, and I can see how we could use them to advantage in the State of Washington——

Mr. HARDWICK. And in every other State.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If we could get a landing place, and get a landing place in Alaska, and get gasoline, and have houses where people can get food, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. HARDWICK. We do not want to carry them to places where there are no houses, but there are few places in this country where you can not get gasoline and very few places in the country where there are not houses and where you can not land an aeroplane, in my judgment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator will find that there will be difficulty in going over Alaska in aeroplanes. The situation now presented to us is to get quick communication with the city of New York. You can send there by telegraph a letter that will carry 50 words for 40 or 50 cents, or you can talk over the telephone for about the same price. So I can not see how it would be used very much. I do not see any special benefit to come from it.

As the Senator from Utah said, if we reject it it will be a saving of that much money, and every little we can save now may mean quite a great deal. When the war is over, with a surplus of aeroplane ability not only in the men to handle them but in the machines themselves, some service of this kind might be developed, but I doubt the wisdom of it at the present time. I can see what can be done by it, and if we are going to take the position that this is the time to try it, that this is the time to determine whether it is feasible and practicable and economical or not, all right; but I doubt the wisdom of such a course.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a few days ago I took occasion to somewhat criticize the proposition. I am not a reactionary so far as the work of the Government is concerned; I want to see it go on in the most efficient manner possible; but I do not feel to-day, as I suggested I did not feel two or three days ago, that we are going to establish very much of a mail route between here and New York and charge 24 cents postage on every letter that goes. I said then it might be a two-days wonder and would attract some attention, but that as a matter of practical utility it would inevitably fail. I hold to that view now, and I hope the appropriation will not be made.

The Senator from Washington called attention to the fighting aeroplane, the Italian aeroplane, that we have all seen in the air and its great strength and said that they have planes of greater horsepower. That is true, but they are a very expensive machine, and so far as carrying mail is concerned it would cost a great deal of money. It costs a good deal to keep them in operation. For the life of me I am unable to see why at this time, when we ought to be conserving our finances as well as our other activities, we should go into this experiment and spend any money upon it.

The time may come, as the Senator suggests, after the war is over, when we have our young men trained for aerial service, when we will have more junk than we will know what to do with, both in aeroplanes and in ships and everything else, when we might take some of those service planes and convert them into a postal route, perhaps at a longer distance than from here to New York, possibly going to Boston, and they might be of more or less service in the West; but why do we want to make any appropriation now for a matter of this kind? I know we are voting money by the billions, and nobody seems to think much about it. It startles me, because I can see there is going to be a day of reckoning; there is going to be a day of liquidation, as far as our finances are concerned. The taxpayers have got to meet these obligations sooner or later, and I think we can get along without this appropriation. I think it is a purely chimerical matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is aware of the fact that this appropriation began two or three years ago, and it is just a continuation of the policy that was begun before the war. The question here is, now that we have begun it and it has been of service, would it not be very much more hurtful and very much more costly if we discontinued it during the war.

Mr. GALLINGER. Since it has been tried for two or three years, I ask the Senator what the result has been.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are still experimenting with it, as provided in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; they are experimenting, and that is the trouble with it. We are experimenting all along the line, so far as aeroplanes are concerned, and we will experiment about this service until the money is used up. Aside from that is the fact that there are few people who are able to pay 24 cents on a letter conveyed from here to New York. They will perhaps file it away for their grandchildren to look at and say, "This is a letter father received by aeroplane."

I really think it is just one of the fancies of the day, one of the foibles, I might say, one of the notions of the age, and I do sincerely hope that the Senate will not make this appropriation. We have been experimenting for two or three years, and if we keep on with the experiments and appropriate a little more money this year, it will, in my judgment, be wasted, and next year still larger appropriations will be asked for, and after a while we shall become about as reckless in that matter as we have been in reference to the appropriations for shipping and for aeroplanes and for various and sundry other things, where some of us have reason to believe the money is not being used to very good advantage.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this only goes to prove what we have so often said in the past, that whenever an appropriation has been made for any purpose whatever it is always carried in appropriation bills until there is some special fight made against it, and then it is never defeated unless it has developed into a scandal of some kind.

I voted for the first appropriation for experimenting with an aeroplane for the purpose of carrying mail between Washington and New York, some two years ago, as I remember it. At that time I felt it was proper to see if that mode of carrying mail could be made a success. No question was raised as to the rate of postage to be charged. The appropriation was simply to see if it could be made a success. Every year since that the Post Office appropriation bill has carried an appropriation for the same purpose.

Mr. President, I feel safe in saying that the first machine that was used for experimenting is obsolete to-day. The whole plan of building aeroplanes has been changed within the last three years, and in three years from now the planes that are being used upon the battle front will be obsolete. It seems to me if we are going to undertake this way of delivering mail we had better wait until we conclude to put the service into operation and take the machine that is the very best known at that time for the purpose, and that will be none too good. I do not believe that it is going to be a financial success. It may be some time or other, but it is a long, long way off.

As far as I am concerned, if I were doing business in Washington, I would prefer, and I think, as far as the Government is concerned, it prefers, to know that the mail is going to arrive in five hours from New York rather than always to be fearful when it leaves New York in an aeroplane that it will never arrive here. If anything happens, instead of arriving in two or three hours it may be two or three days. If there is anything necessary for people doing business, and anything that they desire above everything else, it is that their mail shall be regular, and that they may know when they can get their papers, and when their letters are going to arrive, when mailed on a certain date from any given point.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think this experiment has been carried on far enough now, at least until it can be carried on at a reasonable price and with a fair chance of success.

I know it is only a hundred thousand dollars, and I know that is considered a mere bagatelle to-day; but, Senators, we are patting ourselves on the back and congratulating the American people that we oversubscribed the last $3,000,000,000 liberty loan. Have we stopped to figure out what our appropriations are going to be for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919? Take what is asked for by the War Department and the Navy Department, and if we appropriate what has been asked for up to the present time by those two departments alone it will be almost double the amount that was appropriated for the present fiscal year. We have had three liberty loans subscribed for already, and if the manufacturers of this country had been able to produce the goods that were ordered by our Government and appropriated for last year, instead of the present liberty loan being $3,000,000,000 it would have been $10,000,000,000.

I can not say definitely what the appropriations are going to be for the coming fiscal year, but I know they are going to be more than they were for the present fiscal year, and I know also that we have got to pay for a great many billion dollars' worth of goods that were ordered last year that will be delivered this year, and the amount of the appropriation is only going to be limited by the ability of our country to produce goods. If that ability is $20,000,000,000, I say now that the direct appropriations will be $20,000,000,000 outside of the advances we make to our allies, which I have no doubt will be six or seven billion dollars if the war continues another year.

So I prefer to reserve my congratulations to the American people when they meet the appropriations and the expenses of the war for the year 1919. It is going to strain every institution in this country. It is going to make every man and every woman in the country sacrifice in a way they have never thought of sacrificing before. They have got to begin to save, save, save.

I have no doubt but what we have got to raise more money by taxation, and there is a limit to that. If you place the tax so high upon the industries of the country the result will only be that there will be a reduction in production. So not only will new systems of taxation be resorted to and as much money as it is possible to be raised will be raised by direct taxation, but over and above all that we have got to sell Government bonds amounting to billions of dollars more than we have sold this year.

Mr. President, it seems almost a mockery to talk about an appropriation of $100,000, but ten of them make a million and a thousand million make a billion. I think there are more than a thousand cases where we can save and do no harm whatever in maintaining the Army and the Navy and increase them in power and in efficiency, to carry on a successful war across the water. But when it comes to appropriations that have no connection whatever with the war, when it is a mere expenditure of money with no immediate results, I think the Senate ought to hesitate and ought to prevent it, and prevent it in every case where it is possible.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, being a progressive, I am in favor of this proposition. Much that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said is quite within bounds. Congress should be particularly scrupulous in examining appropriations which are not necessary at this time, and should cut out of bills those that may be found to be unnecessary or undesirable. I am not sure, personally, that this appropriation has been expended in a way that has brought results which will definitely determine what we ought to do in this matter, but it has been in operation a couple of years; and while I think the selection of the route between New York and Washington is not happily made, I think that routes might be selected where an experiment would demonstrate a very great increase in the rapidity of delivering mails. The question of landing places and such considerations must be taken into account—and that would necessarily delay the delivery of mails in large cities like Washington and New York—but the utility of the airplane has been so far demonstrated since the beginning of the war that it is quite clear it is going to be used for many purposes which had not been contemplated three or four years ago. Planes are now being built that actually carry as much as 600 pounds of dynamite, several men, and two or three guns. You can carry as much mail in one of these planes as is carried in a mail car, and can carry it at a very high rate of speed. I think it is quite probable that a route might be undertaken experimentally now where the rapidity of delivering mail might be reduced at least one-half.

There is another reason that appeals to me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator let me ask him a question right there?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have appropriated for this purpose heretofore, I think, $200,000?

Mr. WEEKS. That is my recollection.

Mr. GALLINGER. This will make $300,000. How many letters have been carried between here and New York by airplane during that time?

Mr. WEEKS. I really have not the information, and I have carefully looked over the House hearings. I do not think any information has been furnished.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I suppose the $200,000 has been used up, as usual?

Mr. WEEKS. I am sorry to say, Mr. President, that I think the committee is at fault in not coming here with more definite information about what has been done with the money which has been heretofore appropriated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have never heard of anyone getting any letters by airplane either in New York or in Washington, though perhaps that has happened.

Mr. WEEKS. If we could not get them more quickly by airplanes than the mails are generally delivered in these times between points at a considerable distance from each other the airplane service would be useless and should be discouraged.

Mr. GALLINGER. So far as speed is concerned, I think the Senator from Massachusetts is right about that, because the Postal Service is very much disorganized now; there is no question on that point. I am going to venture to say here that I hope the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads will look into the matter of the disruption of the mail service and see if we can not get some relief.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me, I desire to say that I do not think that such an experiment has been made between here and New York. I think it is the purpose of the Post Office Department to experiment a little with that now; but it has not been done. If the chairman of the committee would consent that this matter be passed over for the present, I should like, for my own guidance, to get from the Post Office Department a detailed statement as to what has been done with the appropriation heretofore made and of the result of the experiments. I can readily see the great advantage that might be achieved in the use of the airships in countries like Alaska.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to passing the item over for the purpose of getting that information.

Mr. WEEKS. Before the item is passed over, I have one other comment which I wish to make, and that is as to the effect it may have on the airplane industry. That industry is now under regulations which have been put in force. No airplane can go into the air without a Government license. Such licenses are only given in very unusual cases, the theory being that photographs may be taken of some places and that those photographs may be used for the benefit of the enemy; at least, I understand that is the theory. But, as a matter of fact, that policy has stopped the development of all airplanes in the United States, except those which are being made for the Government and being made practically under two patents—the Curtiss patent and the Wright patent. There are innumerable concerns that can make airplanes. There are a great many—I do not know how many—small concerns which have developed airplanes that are of considerable value, but that development has entirely stopped since the promulgation of the order to which I refer.

If the Post Office Department will use some of the airplanes which have been developed by small concerns and which may not yet have been perfected it will have a very material result in the development of the whole airplane industry in the United States. Out of that, in my judgment, would be obtained an immense amount of good, much greater indeed than by the expenditure if otherwise made.

I agree with the suggestion which has been made that the Post Office Committee should have come in here with complete information about the expenditures which were made last year and the year before.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, the Post Office Department will send us at once a detailed statement of exactly what has been done and what is contemplated under this appropriation, which will be presented to the Senate before a vote is taken.

Mr. WEEKS. Then I hope the item will be passed over until that information is obtained.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the matter being passed over, to be considered at a later hour during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask what was done with the amendment on page 11, beginning in line 8? I was called out for a little while, and when I returned to the Chamber that page of the bill had been passed. I should like to know if that amendment was adopted or passed over?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to ask that the vote by which that amendment was adopted may be reconsidered, and that the amendment may be passed over. I am inclined to make a point of order on it, unless there is a satisfactory explanation made with reference to it. I ask the chairman of the committee if he would have any objection to having the vote whereby the amendment was adopted reconsidered?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, I ask that the amendment be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. CUMMINS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is the bill being considered under an order providing for the disposal of committee amendments first?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is. The committee amendments are being considered first.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 18, line 16, after the words "in all," to strike out "$28,190,000" and insert "$32,418,500," and on page 19, line 1, after the words "number of," to insert "regular," so as to make the clause read:

Railway Mail Service: For 15 division superintendents, at $3,250 each; 2 assistant superintendents, at $2,350 each; 15 assistant division superintendents, at $2,250 each; 115 chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,100 each; 465 clerks, grade 10, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 2,032 clerks, grade 9, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 393 clerks, grade 8, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 8,299 clerks, grade 7, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 1,078 clerks, grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 1,788 clerks, grade 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 3,801 clerks, grade 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 65 clerks, grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 1,974 clerks, grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 1,837 clerks, grade 1, at not exceeding $900 each; in all, $32,418,500: Provided That railway postal clerks shall be credited with full time when deadheading under orders of the department, and the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum; and, to enable the Postmaster General to reclassify the salaries of railway postal clerks and make necessary appointments and promotions, he may exceed the number of clerks in such of the grades as may be necessary: Provided further, That the number of regular clerks in the aggregate as herein authorized be not exceeded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 24, on page 19, the last clause read being as follows:

For rent, light, heat, fuel, telegraph, miscellaneous and office expenses, schedules of mail trains, telephone service, and badges for railway postal clerks, including rental of offices for division headquarters and chief clerk, Railway Mail Service, in Washington, D. C., and rental of space for terminal railway post offices for the distribution of mails when the furnishing of space for such distribution can not under the Postal Laws and Regulations properly be required of railroad companies without additional compensation, and for equipment and miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to terminal railway post offices, $532,156.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to come in on page 19, line 24.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, at the end of line 24, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$532,156" and to insert in lieu thereof "$732,156."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama give a brief explanation of what the $200,000 additional is asked for?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Post Office Department represented that this appropriation was absolutely necessary in order to obtain the proper facilities for handling the mails at the depots in Chicago, New York, and some other large cities, growing largely out of the increase of parcels post matter and the general increase in mail delivery.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 20, line 5, before the words "per day," to strike out "$3" and insert "$4," so as to make the clause read:

For per diem allowance of two assistant superintendents while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster General, not to exceed $4 per day, and for their necessary official expenses not covered by their per diem allowance, not exceeding $500; in all, $2,420

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. On page 21, line 4, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, at the end of line 4, it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

Provided further, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed as soon as practicable to fix and determine from time to time the fair and reasonable rates and compensation for the transportation of mail matter by urban and interurban electric railway common carriers and the service connected therewith, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rate or compensation and to publish same, and orders so made and published shall continue in force until changed by the commission after due notice and hearing: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any urban or interurban electric railroad to refuse to perform mail service at the rates or methods of compensation provided for such service when required by the Postmaster General so to do, and for such offense shall be fined $100. Each day of refusal shall constitute a separate offense.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama if he will not have that amendment printed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. And let it be passed over for the present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let the amendment be passed over and be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. I make that request in order to enable us to see just what it provides for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 21, line 10, after the word "mails," to strike out "$1,200,000" and insert "$1,400,000, of which amount $200,000 shall be available immediately," so as to read:

For censorship of foreign mails, $1,400,000, of which amount $200,000 shall be available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in line 20, after the word "each," to insert:

And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended to pay the expense of censoring mail from the military forces connected with the American Expeditionary Force, which mail has been censored in Europe.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in reference to the pending amendment I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama if it makes any change whatever in relation to the censoring in this country of mail from our military forces connected with the American Expeditionary Force abroad?

Mr. BANKHEAD. This amendment simply provides that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for censoring the mails from France which have already been censored on the other side.

Mr. SMOOT. My understanding is that mail censored in any of the countries allied with the United States in the war is not censored in this country, and so it seems to me that the amendment is useless.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then it will not do any harm; it is merely provided that such mail shall not be censored again.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure that it is not done to-day, and I can not see why such a provision should be put in this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Our information is that it is quite frequently done. This amendment, at any rate, can do no harm.

Mr. SMOOT. My information came from a hearing that we had before the Appropriations Committee, at which the Postmaster General stated to us that it was not done. The members of the Appropriations Committee thought it would be an absolutely useless expenditure of money to censor mail here that had been censored abroad. It was in connection with an appropriation asked for by the Postmaster General that this question arose, and I am quite sure from what he said to the Appropriations Committee that no mail coming from the countries allied with us in the war is censored in this country.

Mr. HARDWICK. This certainly accomplishes exactly that purpose. There is some apprehension that it might not always be that way, and so we thought we had better fix it so that they could not do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General," on page 22, line 9, after the word "wrappers," to strike out "$1,825,000" and insert "$3,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

For manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 12, after the word "agency," to strike out "$16,000" and insert "$18,400," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of agent and assistants to examine and distribute stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, and expenses of agency, $18,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer an amendment to come in on page 23, at the end of line 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, at the end of line 16, it is proposed to strike out "$580,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$725,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer another amendment to come in on the same page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, at the end of line 25, it is proposed to strike out "$230,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$275,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. On page 34, in line 1, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "$325,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer an amendment to come in on the same page, in line 20.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, at the end of line 20, it is proposed to strike out "$370,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer another amendment to come in on page 24, at the end of line 25.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "$170,900" and insert "$190,900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General," on page 24, line 1, after the amendment striking out "$325,000" and inserting "$400,000," to insert:

Provided, That of this amount the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not to exceed $30,000 for the purchase of and experiments with tying devices or cords for the Postal Service. The Postmaster General is authorized to use the proceeds derived from the sale of waste twine as a further appropriation, and shall submit a report to Congress of the amount of twine sold and the proceeds derived therefrom.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator a question regarding the amendment on page 24, beginning in line 2. I will state that that same amendment, as I remember, was included in the general deficiency appropriation bill, and I wish to ask the Senator if it went out in conference? I forget whether it did or not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment on page 24, beginning in line 2, reading:

Provided, That of this amount the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not to exceed $30,000 for the purchase of and experiments with tying devices or cords for the Postal Service.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think that was in the deficiency bill; but if it was, it went out in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wanted to know if the Senator had looked it up.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not believe it was in that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that a similar amendment was before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think the Senator has in mind, probably, some conversation in the committee about this question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out, beginning in line 5 with the words "The Postmaster General," the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. SMOOT. On what page?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Page 24, line 5, beginning with the words "The Postmaster General."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama moves an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 24, lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, it is proposed to strike out:

The Postmaster General is authorized to use the proceeds derived from the sale of waste twine as a further appropriation, and shall submit a report to Congress of the amount of twine sold and the proceeds derived therefrom.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 25, line 16, after the word "same," to strike out "$255,000" and insert "$405,000: Provided, That of this amount the Postmaster General is authorized to expend $100,000 for the installation of experimental mail-distributing machines," so as to make the clause read:

For rental, purchase, exchange, and repair of canceling machines and motors, mechanical mail-handling apparatus and other labor-saving devices, including cost of power in rented buildings, and miscellaneous expenses of installation and operation of same, $405,000: Provided, That of this amount the Postmaster General is authorized to expend $100,000 for the installation of experimental mail-distributing machines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 22, after the word "keys," to strike out "chairs" and insert "chains," and, on page 26, line 2, after the word "expedient," to strike out "$450,000" and insert "$1,000,000," so as to read:

For the purchase, manufacture, and repair of mail bags and other mail containers and attachments, mail locks, keys, chains, tools, machinery, and material necessary for same, and for incidental expenses pertaining thereto, also material, machinery, and tools necessary for the manufacture and repair in the equipment shops at Washington, D. C., of such other equipment for the Postal Service as may be deemed expedient, $1,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge if there was any evidence before the committee that caused the change from $450,000 to $1,000,000 in the item just read by the Secretary, which is found at the top of page 26? The original amount appropriated by the House, as I gather from the bill, was $450,000. The Senate committee amendment seems to call for an appropriation of $1,000,000, and I am wondering whether or not there was any evidence before the committee that led to the change from $450,000 to $1,000,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will excuse me, I will answer the question. I think I remember what took place in the committee, as disclosed by the hearings. The increase is recommended because a mistake was made in the estimate for these different items. Since the war prices have gone up. The department found they could not buy the articles named at all for the prices estimated, and they had not estimated high enough. Their estimates, which were made in August last, were inaccurate in every way. They were very frank about it.

Mr. KING. I notice that in a number of other paragraphs——

Mr. HARDWICK. That same thing has happened a great many times, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. There has been a very great increase.

Mr. HARDWICK. Nearly always the reason has been that which I have given. For instance, in the case of mail sacks, tying devices, twine, and almost everything used in the entire Postal Department, they have had the same experience with mounting prices which has been common everywhere else in the country.

Mr. KING. I supposed, as I read the increases, that that was probably the reason, but I could not understand, unless additional items had been appropriated for, why the appropriation should in some cases be doubled.

Mr. HARDWICK. We have been getting on pretty rapidly with the bill; but I think it is probably due to the Senate and to the country that we should give the Senate some detailed information from the department bearing out exactly what I have said to the Senator. Here is a letter from the Postmaster General, addressed to the chairman of the committee, and dated April 8, 1918, on this very subject. I quote the following:

I take the liberty of again calling to your attention a condition which exists with reference to appropriations asked for in connection with the purchase of supplies and equipment for the Postal Service.

Since the estimates were made up last August there has been a rising tendency in the cost of raw materials of practically all classes. Especially has this been noted since this department commenced the opening of bids for certain supplies during the last month or two. The lowest bid for letter boxes and posts showed an increase over present contract prices for these articles of over 16 per cent, and on letter carriers' satchels the advance was so great that all bids were rejected, and this particular item will be readvertised. In making the award for cotton towels for the next fiscal year it was necessary to accept a bid 54.76 per cent higher than our present contract price. Only a very few of the bids have been opened so far for other supplies for the fiscal year 1919, but these indicate the high prices the department has reason to expect when proposals are opened for the remainder of the items.

I addressed a letter to you on this subject under date of March 21, but, as the Post Office appropriation bill was about to be reported, it was too late for your committee to act on the request for increases in the following appropriations.

Then he refers to stationery—as the Senator will remember, we have passed several of these items—for which the amount in the House bill was $580,000, which is now increased to $725,000; wrapping twine from $325,000 to $400,000; and so on.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to put the entire letter in the RECORD in connection with my remarks. It shows why the department claims it has had to readjust its estimates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1918.

Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BANKHEAD: I take the liberty of again calling to your attention a condition which exists with reference to appropriations asked for in connection with the purchase of supplies and equipment for the Postal Service.

Since the estimates were made up last August there has been a rising tendency in the cost of raw materials of practically all classes. Especially has this been noted since this department commenced the opening of bids for certain supplies during the last month or two. The lowest bid for letter boxes and posts showed an increase over present contract prices for these articles of over 16 per cent, and on letter carriers' satchels the advance was so great that all bids were rejected and this particular item will be readvertised. In making the award for cotton towels for the next fiscal year it was necessary to accept a bid 54.76 per cent higher than our present contract price. Only a very few of the bids have been opened so far for other supplies for the fiscal year 1919, but these indicate the high prices the department has reason to expect when proposals are opened for the remainder of the items.

I addressed a letter to you on this subject under date of March 21, but as the Post Office appropriation bill was about to be reported it was too late for your committee to act on the request for increases in the following appropriations:

Appropriation item.	Amount in House bill.	Recommend increase to—
For stationery, etc.	$580,000	$725,000
For wrapping twine, etc.	325,000	400,000
For postmarking stamps, etc.	230,000	275,000
For miscellaneous equipment, etc.	370,000	400,000
For defraying expenses incident to shipment of supplies, etc.	170,000	190,000

Previous to the receipt of my letter of March 21 your committee had already taken care of the increased appropriations asked for therein in connection with (1) rental, purchase, exchange, and repair of canceling machines; (2) the purchase, etc., of mail bags and equipment, etc.; (3) for compensation of labor employed in the equipment shops. The same reasons given in my request for the increase of these items obtain in connection with the items above referred to.

The necessity for increasing the above five appropriations is urgent. As you know, the mail service is handling the greatest volume of business in its history. The establishment of so many concentration camps for troops, the dispatch of mail for the Expeditionary Forces to France, the increase in the weight limit on parcels—all these contribute to increase the postal business. It follows that there must be an increase in the consumption of supplies, and that increase, when considered in connection with the unusual advance in prices, makes it imperatively necessary to have appropriations in larger sums than were originally intended when the estimates were prepared last August.

While the department realized that unusual war conditions would inevitably cause an increase in the price of postal supplies and equipment, the extent of such increases could not be contemplated at the time the estimates were submitted.

The equipment and supplies for which the increases of the particular appropriations enumerated in this letter are intended are absolutely necessary to carry on the Postal Service as it must be carried on during the war crisis, and of course your committee will thoroughly understand and appreciate the importance of this. To fail to have such supplies and equipment will result in hampering the proper conduct of the Postal Service and seriously impair its efficiency.

I shall therefore appreciate very much indeed if you will see to it that the increases asked for in the appropriations above mentioned are embodied in the Post Office appropriation bill when it is taken up on the floor of the Senate for consideration.

Very sincerely,

A. S. BURLESON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 26, line 11, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out "$155,000" and insert "$278,250," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to labor employed in the equipment shops at Washington, D. C., $278,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 15, after the word "That," to insert "hereafter," and, after line 18, to strike out "nor shall any of said sum be expended for the establishment of new star-route service for a patronage which is already entirely served by Rural Delivery Service" and insert "nor shall any of said sum be expended for star-route service for a patronage a major portion of which has been served within 12 months prior thereto by Rural Delivery Service, unless upon petition therefor by a majority of the proposed patrons who are heads of families residing upon and along such proposed star route," so as to make the clause read:

For inland transportation by star routes (excepting service in Alaska), including temporary service to newly established offices, $8,675,000: Provided, That hereafter no part of this appropriation shall be expended for continuance of any star-route service the patronage of which shall be served entirely by the extension of Rural Delivery Service, nor shall any of said sum be expended for star-route service for a patronage a major portion of which has been served within 12 months prior thereto by Rural Delivery Service, unless upon petition therefor by a majority of the proposed patrons who are heads of families residing upon and along such proposed star route.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 4, after the word "thereof," to strike out "$53,000,000" and insert "$62,875,000," and, in line 7, after the word "stations," to insert:

Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1918, rural carriers assigned to standard horse-drawn vehicle routes on which daily service is performed shall receive $24 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles: Provided further, That a carrier may use any character of vehicle on a horse-drawn vehicle route that is approved by the postmaster of the post office from which said route starts.

So as to make the clause read:

For pay of rural carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof, $62,875,000: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for the compensation of clerks in charge of rural stations: Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1918, rural carriers assigned to standard horse-drawn vehicle routes on which daily service is performed shall receive $24 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles: Provided further, That a carrier may use any character of vehicle on a horse-drawn vehicle route that is approved by the postmaster of the post office from which said route starts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator having this bill in charge what is the cause for the increase from $53,000,000 to $62,875,000 for Rural Delivery Service? Is it because the number engaged in that service has been increased or because the compensation has been increased above that allowed by the House?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the reason for this increase is that the compensation of carriers has been increased to this extent: Wherever the carrier serves a route in excess of 24 miles, the committee gives him $24 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of the 24, which is the standard route; and then we provide a 15 per cent increase in addition. I want to say that this increase will come up in an amendment that we are going to offer later, which provides for an increase of pay to all the employees of the Post Office Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator allow the amendment in line 4, together with the other amendment beginning in line 7, the proviso, to be passed over?

Mr. McKELLAR. They are related and will have to be changed any way.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon the suggestion, there is not much need to pass over the amendment providing the appropriation; that is a mere detail, and, of course, if we change the other proposition in any respect then we will correct the total accordingly.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me the proper thing to do is to let the entire paragraph go over. When we determine the percentage, whether it shall be 15 or 20 per cent, in the case of the other amendment affecting this subject, then we will have to change the amount; and if we agree to it now we will have to go back and change it. So I do not think it ought to be agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. It really does not make any difference either way; it is not of great importance.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that these two amendments go over.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let them go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 27, line 16, after the words "third class," to strike out "$600,000" and insert $690,000," so as to make the clause read:

For village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, $690,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 19, to insert:

SEC. 2. That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the annual salaries fixed by law for employees of the Postal Service shall be increased 15 per cent: Provided further, That the salaries of such employees not fixed by law but paid from lump-sum appropriations herein provided shall be increased 15 per cent, but such increases shall not apply to the special assistant to the Attorney General appropriated for in this act and to postmasters at offices of the first, second, and third classes: Provided further, That postmasters at offices of the fourth class shall receive 15 per cent in addition to the compensation to which they are now entitled by law but no credit shall hereafter be allowed for the cancellation of postage-due stamps: And provided further, That hereafter substitute, temporary, or auxiliary clerks and letter carriers at first and second class post offices shall be paid at the rate of 40 cents an hour.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that amendment go over.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to offer an amendment, on page 27, striking out section 2 and inserting in lieu thereof the matter I send to the desk. I merely want to offer it now in order that it may be printed.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of section 2, as proposed by the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 2. That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the annual salaries fixed——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not care to have it read; let it be printed.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, so that we can have it before us in the morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want it read at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read, Mr. President.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to its being read. That, however, will merely consume time, for it will be printed in the RECORD in any event.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to hear it read now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

On page 27, strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the annual salaries fixed by law for clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, railway postal clerks of grade 1 to grade 10, inclusive, supervisory and other employees of the Postal Service whose compensation is in excess of $1,500 per annum, shall be increased $200 per annum: Provided, That the salaries of such other employees fixed by law or paid from lump-sum appropriations provided for in this act who receive $800 per annum or less shall be increased 20 per cent per annum; those who receive in excess of $800 and not more than $1,500 shall be increased 15 per cent per annum. The compensation for rural carriers assigned to standard horse-drawn vehicle routes shall be increased 20 per cent per annum, and carriers who perform service as motor carriers on routes 50 miles and more in length shall receive an increase of 10 per cent per annum. Such increases shall not apply to the special assistant to the Attorney General appropriated for in this act and to postmasters at offices of the first, second, and third classes: Provided further, That postmasters of the fourth class shall receive the same compensation as provided by law prior to the passage of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, except that they shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations on the first $100 or less per quarter instead of on the first $50 or less per quarter: And provided further, That hereafter substitute, temporary, or auxiliary clerks and letter carriers at first and second class offices shall be paid at the rate of 40 cents an hour: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangements with the Post Office Department, or to employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation: Provided further, That the increase compensation at the rates of 5 per cent and 10 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section. So much as may be necessary for the increases provided for in this act is hereby appropriated."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I also desire to offer an amendment on page 28, line 12, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the new section 3, on page 28, in line 12, after the word "offices," it is proposed to add the following:

And railway postal clerks assigned to terminal railway post offices and transfer offices.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that be pending, too, Mr. President. I ask that that same amendment be pending here with section 3. Does the Senator want that section adopted now?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I should like to have the section adopted. It is an amendment to which I do not think there will be any opposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to see the effect that has on this amendment as a whole, and I should like to have it go over until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, on page 28, at the end of line 19, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, at the end of line 19, it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

Provided, That hereafter, when the needs of the Postal Service require the employment on Sundays and holidays of railway postal clerks assigned to terminal railway post offices and transfer offices, they shall be granted compensatory time in the same manner as provided by law for clerks and carriers in first and second class offices.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the same amendment is found in another part of the bill, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] asked that it go over. I want to ask the Senator if he desires——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 3 has already gone over, and, as this is a part of it, it goes over with it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is mistaken about that appearing in another part of the bill, though.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to come in on page 28, line 22.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 22, in the committee amendment to section 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "contract" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "contracts."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have one more amendment on page 28, line 23, which I should like to have adopted before we adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, in line 23, after the word "envelopes," it is proposed to insert:

Blank books, and the Official Postal Guide.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that amendment was not agreed to, was it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought it was.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not so understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair said. If there is any objection, it will be set aside, however.

Mr. SMOOT. The Official Guide is published, as I understand, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing. The contract is let there; and if the Senator will allow me, I should like to have this amendment go over, in order to see just what effect it will have.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection, if the Postal Guide is published by the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not say it was published by the Joint Committee on Printing; but the contract for its printing——

Mr. BANKHEAD. The contract is not made by the Post Office Department?

Mr. SMOOT. The contract for printing the Guide is made outside of the Post Office Department.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Post Office Department has nothing to do with the contract for printing the Guide? I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not say that, but I want to look up the matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the committee has reported section 2 as shown in the bill now before the Senate. The Senator from Alabama now offers a substitute for it; but I see no statement indicating the amount of the appropriation, either in the amendment as proposed by the Senate committee originally or in the substitute therefor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That will be attended to a little later. When we get to the adoption of this section we will offer that amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Has the Senator in mind now what would be the probable difference in the expenditure?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Between what appropriations—the present appropriation and the proposed one?

Mr. POMERENE. Between the expenditures under section 2 as reported by the committee and under the amendment now offered as a substitute therefor?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is very little difference. It is practically the same, according to the estimates of the Post Office Department. There is very little difference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Did the committee submit any figures showing the increase in the compensation paid to the employees of the Government in this department above that which they are now receiving?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; there is a report here as to that.

Mr. KING. The report shows that, does it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the amendment that he offered as a substitute for section 2 is not the so-called Madden bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is, in substance. It is not entirely the Madden bill. For instance, the Madden bill proposes to make it permanent legislation, but we only provide for the current fiscal year. That is practically the difference.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not a fact that the Madden bill will increase the appropriation about $11,000,000?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Over what?

Mr. SMOOT. Over the appropriation that was made in the House.

Mr. WATSON. Over the 15 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Over the 15 per cent provided for.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It increases it; I do not know exactly how much, but it will increase it materially. That is what we will have to figure out when we come to the section.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I am not objecting to the increase in pay, and I perhaps would support the Madden amendment as against the provision in the bill; but the Senator from Ohio asked whether it would increase the appropriation, and I understood the chairman to say——

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Ohio asked what the difference was between the two bills, the original Senate bill and the House provision, the Madden bill. I replied that, according to the figures of the Post Office Department, there was very little difference, not a great deal.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, my understanding is that the substitute offered by the chairman of the committee for section 2 is the Madden bill without the legislative feature.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. That is, the schedule of wages and salaries provided is the same as in the Madden bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. But the legislative features were stricken out, so that it would be an appropriation for the fiscal year, and not permanently. That is the only difference; but my further understanding is that the difference between the amount of money appropriated in section 2 as reported by the Post Office Committee and the amount of money appropriated in the substitute offered by the chairman of the committee would amount to several millions of dollars.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is likely.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, just so that we will have it in the RECORD, the Postmaster General says that the cost of the increases provided in the bill—that is, the Madden bill—would amount to $40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1919, and $44,000,000 for the following years, and is not warranted.

Mr. WATSON. And the cost of the 15 per cent increase would be about $33,000,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Thirty-three million two hundred and ninety-seven thousand dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I thought; making an increase of $11,000,000, as I stated.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; about $12,000,000.

Mr. WATSON. About eleven.

Mr. HARDWICK. Something like that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That has all gone over until to-morrow; so I ask that the Secretary may proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 4, to insert:

SEC. 5. That the provisions of section 3 of the act of March 3, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," providing increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of more than $480 and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, shall apply during the fiscal year 1918 to all watchmen, messengers, and laborers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, at the end of line 13, after the word "all," it is proposed to insert the words "requisition fillers."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the section which has just been read may go over and be considered with the other sections that have gone over. I do not object to the adoption of the amendment to that section which has just been offered by the chairman of the committee, but I ask the Senator to permit the entire section to go over, after adopting the amendment just tendered by him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. To which section does the Senator refer?

Mr. KING. Section 5.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator from Utah desire that section to go over?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. For what purpose?

Mr. KING. The entire compensation features of the bill have gone over up to this moment, as I understand, and I have not had a chance to read this provision.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me, he does not want that himself. This is a proposition that whatever increases we allow for the current year for which we are appropriating, we will not start on the basis of the other temporary increases of past years and pyramid. No Senator would want to do that.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is exactly what that section provides.

Mr. KING. It occurred to me, in view of the fact that it related to compensation——

Mr. HARDWICK. While that is true in a way, and it is a thing related to compensation, there can be no possible dispute about that.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a limitation, so it is all right.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is no need for it to go over.

Mr. KING. Under the statement of the Senator from Georgia, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am sure I am right. If not, I will join the Senator in having it reconsidered.

Mr. KING. If, upon further examination, I find that it reaches the point which I have in mind, I shall move to reconsider.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There will be no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 6. The Postmaster General may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, accept United States liberty loan bonds in lieu of either corporate or personal surety from contractors, officers, and employees of the Postal Service to indemnify the Government against losses resulting from the failure of any contractor, officer, or employee of the Postal Service to properly discharge his official duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 21, to insert:

SEC. 7. That to promote the conservation of food products and to facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer, and the delivery of articles necessary in the production of such food products to the producers, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes in the vicinity of such cities of the United States as he may select, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and the cost of such experiments, not exceeding $100,000, may be paid by the Postmaster General out of any unexpended appropriations of the Postal Service, and the Postmaster General shall report the result of such experiments to the Congress at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has the Senator in charge of the bill any information as to what real benefit has come from similar appropriations in the past?

Mr. BANKHEAD. All we know about it is contained in a communication sent up by the Postmaster General, in which it is stated that a very thorough investigation has been made of this device and, in the opinion of the department, it is going to be a great labor-saving machine and will save the Government an immense amount of money, and they ask for that amount of appropriation. That is all I know about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I guess perhaps we had better let him have the $100,000, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator is talking about this motor-truck service.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I beg the Senator's pardon. I misunderstood him.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, deliver and turn over to the Postmaster General from time to time, and without charge therefor, for use in the Postal Service, such aeroplanes and automobiles or parts thereof as may prove to be, or as shall become, unsuitable for the purposes of the War Department; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to use the same, in his discretion, in the transportation of the mails and to pay the necessary expenses thereof out of the appropriation for inland transportation by steamboat or other power boat or by aeroplanes or star route.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, section 7 was acted upon before I fully appreciated the situation. I move to reconsider the vote by which section 7, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to that motion; not pro forma, at least. I think we might as well settle that now, if we are going to settle it at all. The Senate has voted on this very proposition and has passed it almost unanimously, and it has passed the House of Representatives in a different form, and if anything in the world is settled this ought to be. Of course, the Senator has the right to raise that question; but the Senate has already had full information on that subject, and I think we might as well vote on it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. KING. This matter was considered, as I recall, in some former bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. A bill that I introduced myself, and reported from the Post Office Committee, and it passed the Senate.

Mr. KING. Was that a part of the appropriation bill?

Mr. HARDWICK. No, sir; it was an independent bill. It passed on its own merits, after an extended discussion.

Mr. KING. There was objection to it, then?

Mr. HARDWICK. There was objection to it, then.

Mr. KING. Is this to continue the appropriation then made, the activities of the agency then provided?

Mr. HARDWICK. The bill did not become a law. It did not pass the House of Representatives. The House put it in what was known as the Madden bill. It has passed the House of Representatives in the Madden bill, but the bill that passed the Senate did not pass the House, and the bill that has passed the House has not yet been considered in the Senate. So that, while the proposition has passed both Houses of Congress by overwhelming votes, the same bill has not passed them both; and therefore it is included in the Post Office appropriation bill, it being a provision for the Postal Service.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator alluding to section 7?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. I thought the Senator moved to reconsider that section.

Mr. KING. The section which it is alleged provides for the promotion and conservation of food and food products?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; for these automobile truck routes.

Mr. KING. And to facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. It is to have the Government, through the Post Office Department, embark upon the business of carrying freight?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly. I am used to looking questions squarely in the face, and that is exactly what I argued out in the Senate before; but, in my judgment, if there ever was a practical way of cutting the cost of living for the people in the cities, it is to get all of this truck and stuff brought in somehow or other. These people have no express service, and they did not have any mail service until the Government established it.

I am willing to argue the question out. I remember that the Senator opposed the bill before, and I do not blame him. His opposition was very much in line with the general sentiments that I entertained, but it does seem to me that in times of war and confronted by the conditions by which we are confronted, this is a practical way to try to cut the cost of living.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia, in my opinion, is usually right about questions relating to the powers of the Federal Government. Indeed, he is so seldom wrong that I may say he is always right; but upon this occasion it seems to me that the position which he assumes is not tenable.

I can not understand where there is constitutional warrant, or indeed where there can be found any justification for the policy of having the Federal Government embark upon a great commercial enterprise, such as the carrying of the freight of the people of the United States. That is essentially a private business and can be better carried on by private persons. Of course there are very specious arguments, very strong sophistical arguments, that can be made in favor of a strong paternalism or extreme State socialism. There are many reasons assigned in favor of the Government owning and operating all railroad and transportation instrumentalities. Many are now insisting that the Government take over the express companies, the telephone and telegraph companies, and all public utilities. Indeed, some persons are insisting that the Nation acquire and operate all mines, smelters, manufacturing plants, and all business concerns which in any way affect the public. Able arguments have been made by learned men in support of these propositions; but, conceding the strength of the arguments, in my opinion the policy of such a course is unwise and in the end would prove disastrous to our Nation and destructive of our institutions and social life.

The plan here presented is along the same line. It is a part of the same scheme and is a symptom of this disease which is now affecting the American people. Of course the war is invoked to sanctify many of these plans, so revolutionary and unsound.

Of course, if the Government is to become a common carrier, and becomes the owner of all transportation facilities, then there could be no objection in principle to this legislation. The question would be one of degree only. If our theory of government is to be changed and instead of having a government of the people, we are to have a huge, overpowering paternalism, then this scheme must be alluring and wholly satisfying. But if we still believe in the government of the fathers, and are still willing that governments shall be confined to their legitimate functions, then we can not approve of this proposed legislation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I just want to suggest to the Senator if it is not true, and if he did not support the proposition, that the Government is now engaged in the transportation of freight on land and sea, both, so that there is very little room left for this argument. We have the railroads, and are operating them. We have built the ships, or are building them, and are going to operate them as soon as we can get them. So that while I think the Senator is right on the general proposition—although I believe that a stronger case can be made for this than for either one of these propositions—there is very little room of that kind to stand in now, during the war, at least.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think my good friend ought to embarrass me by asking my opinion as to the wisdom of our action in taking over the railroads of the United States. Personally, I do not think it was necessary or a wise thing to do, and in my humble opinion we will live to regret it. But it was urged by the President and by many others as a necessary war measure. The congested condition of traffic and the combination of many extraordinary circumstances apparently made such a step imperatively necessary. In my opinion it was not necessary. That there should have been some amendment to the Federal laws relating to railroad and transportation companies there can be no doubt, and if a year ago we had dealt with the question in a broad and comprehensive way there would have been no rational demand for the Government to seize and operate the railroads. But we did take them over; but I do not want my friend to use that as an argument to support the proposition that we should still further invade the field of private endeavor and still further pervert the powers and functions of the Federal Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know; but the Government is already in the freight-carrying business, so I do not think the Senator ought to be particularly worried about a little extension of the service.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the argument made by the Senator from Georgia is quite sound, and I hope he will bear it in mind when we take up the rent-profiteering bill to-morrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Senator think we are going to turn the railroads back to the railroad companies?

Mr. KING. I suggested a few moments ago that there was a time when we needed prophets, and I quoted the old Biblical statement that without vision the people will perish. The Senator from Tennessee had assumed the rôle of the prophet more than I had done; and I ask him now, by way of reply to his interrogation, whether we will turn them back?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have very serious doubts about it in my own mind. I do not think we will.

Mr. KING. Well, I will not hazard any opinion, Mr. President, because I do not know what will be done. I have an opinion as to what ought to be done, but no one can determine what will be done, particularly in view of the industrial and economic changes which the war will produce, and in view of the fact that we are fast transferring to the Government not only the business of the country but the powers and functions of the States.

But, Mr. President, I do not believe in the destruction of individualism and of individual initiative and in the sources of power which have made this a great Nation. Democracy rests for its perpetuity upon strong individual units; upon the development of the individual. The State is strong in a great democracy only when the people are strong. If the Government lays it hands upon all business, controls all enterprises, directs all the people, determines and limits their activities, in short, absorbs them and draws them into its all-embracing arms, then there is no democracy; the swirling waters of a mighty socialism will have engulfed the people and destroyed the Republic.

Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the section was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A division is called for. All those in favor of the motion to reconsider will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us adjourn right now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must decide this question. The motion to reconsider is carried. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 9, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 8, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father Almighty, to whom we are indebted for all things, uphold, sustain, and guide us in this hour which tries men's souls. Life, home, liberty, and all that we hold dear are in the balance. We thank Thee for the wave of patriotism sweeping throughout our land, which has touched the hearts of our young men and brought them to the colors, for a supreme sacrifice on the altar of liberty, truth, justice, right; for the sacrifices of fathers, mothers, wives, children in giving their dear ones to the cause; in the willingness of the people, men and women, to meet the situation bravely and pour out their substance to the necessities of the Government; meeting excessive taxation, the liberty-loan call, the conservation of food products, giving their brain and brawn to uphold our sailors and soldiers and their allies in the strife; for the unanimity existing in the Congress of the United States which lifts its Members above all party considerations to meet the demands of the people. Give us, we beseech Thee, wisdom, strength, courage, fortitude, a supreme faith in Thee, that right shall prevail, civilization have its sway; and everlasting praise be Thine through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL STATEMENT.

Mr. GORDON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GORDON. I desire to make a short statement of a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. During the debate yesterday on the conference report on the Senate amendments to the espionage bill I was called from the floor of the House to the Committee on Military Affairs. I was advised that they were waiting for me there. I was not present when the vote was taken in the House on that bill. If I had been present, I would have voted "nay."

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. By special order, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 20 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy just extended to me, and the many courtesies and constant kindnesses of the Members of the House during my illness as well as for many years before. I am feeling fine. [Applause.] But my medical advisers think that it would not be advisable for me at the present session of Congress to resume my duties in the House. While I do not have confidence that any physician always knows the right thing, still my inclination as well as the advice given to me has led me to determine to go home to the garden and stay out in the open air during the summer. [Applause.]

I thought I would like to say a word to the House before going. What we all need, what you need in the House, what the administration needs, what the country needs is determination and patience. Humanity is not so made that you can evolve great organizations offhand. We are engaged in a struggle with probably the most efficient organization of people in the world. We have had faith that Yankee ingenuity, American genius, the inventive skill of our own people might largely win the war. It may become a great factor. It is not unlikely that this war will be won, as many past wars have been won, by something entirely new, which developed after the war has begun. But whatever is done, we must all keep our minds set on the firm determination never to quit without complete victory. [Applause.] It can not be expected that the greatest struggle the earth has seen will not have its rises and its falls; that there will not come times of great optimism and times of a low pessimism.

But there is but one thing for us to do, one thing for our country to do, and that is to exert its utmost effort and never quit until it has succeeded. [Applause.]

And then we must have patience. We are appropriating here unbelievable sums of money. There are being expended by our Government these enormous amounts. Mistakes will occur here, mistakes will occur there. You can not build up a great army and navy and the great organization that goes with it without mistakes. Let us help to correct them, but never forget that they are natural and can not be avoided. We must have patience. We must not be too hurried in our judgment. We must not condemn too quickly where mistakes have occurred. We must not forget that we have made mistakes, both personally and legislatively. I know the feeling, I think, on both sides of this House: In the war there is no partisanship. [Applause.]

We stand as a united country and a united people, unwilling to let bickerings at home affect our determination to win abroad.

There are many things which I would like to say to the House, many things which have occurred to me in my retreat, but I do not propose to obtrude myself upon the deliberations of the House. I have watched in a way from the outside the actions of the House and the doings of the administration, the building up of the Army and Navy, the failures that have occurred here, the too great optimism which sometimes has sprung forward there, the reports sometimes about what we were going to do as though they were already done. But the people do not need to be misinformed and led into hopes which are not realized in order to keep their determination. They are bound to win the war as we are. [Prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 152. Joint resolution to prevent profiteering in the District of Columbia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SEARS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence until June 7.

SALE OF LIBERTY BONDS.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a statement or summary of the status of subscriptions to the third liberty loan on Saturday in the sixth Federal reserve district, embracing Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Louisiana, and Mississippi, from which it appears that Alabama leads with an oversubscription of 79 per cent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a summary of subscriptions to the third liberty loan in the sixth Federal reserve district. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MOTHERS' DAY.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer a concurrent resolution and ask that it be read and considered.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. Unless it is a privileged matter or of very great and pressing importance the Chair would rather have the gentleman hold it until to-morrow. It is not of great pressing importance, is it?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I would like to have it done by Sunday. It is in reference to Mothers' Day.

The SPEAKER. Take it up to-morrow.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS ON ESPIONAGE BILL.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. BROWN and Mr. LANGLEY to extend their remarks on the espionage bill.

MANUFACTURE OF GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES AT ATLANTA PENITENTIARY.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned yesterday the previous question had been ordered on the rule which provides for the consideration of H. R. 8938, the Atlanta Penitentiary cotton-factory bill. I desire to ask when the vote will be taken on that rule?

The SPEAKER. It goes over until to-morrow, this being Calendar Wednesday. That has been ruled three or four times by Mr. Speaker CANNON and myself. The Clerk will call the roster of committees.

STANDARDIZATION OF SCREW THREADS.

Mr. ASHBROOK (when the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up H. R. 10852, to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BOOHER in the chair, for the consideration of H. R. 10852.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the bill read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the commission for the standardization of screw threads, hereinafter referred to as the commission, which shall be composed of five commissioners, one of whom shall be the Director of the Bureau of Standards, who shall be chairman of the commission; one a commissioned officer of the Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War; one a commissioned officer of the Navy, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and two to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, one of whom shall be chosen from nominations made by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and one from nominations made by the Society of Automotive Engineers.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to ascertain and establish standards for screw threads, which shall be submitted to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce for their acceptance and approval. Such standards, when thus accepted and approved, shall be adopted and used in the several manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Departments, and, so far as practicable, in all specifications for screw threads in proposals for manufactured articles, parts, or materials to be used under the direction of these departments.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate such standards for use by the public and cause the same to be published as a public document.

SEC. 4. That the commission shall serve without compensation, but nothing herein shall be held to affect the pay of the commissioners appointed from the Army and Navy or of the Director of the Bureau of Standards.

SEC. 5. That the commission may adopt rules and regulations in regard to its procedure and the conduct of its business.

SEC. 6. That the commission shall cease and terminate at the end of one year from the date of its appointment.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads. I trust that no one will become alarmed because this bill proposes to create another commission, because this commission is to be composed of an Army officer, a Navy officer, the Director of the Bureau of Standards, and two members who are to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, one from the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and one from the Society of Automotive Engineers, and all are to serve without compensation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, does this bill come from the committee with a unanimous report?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a bill about which there has been some correspondence, and I should like to know whether the gentleman proposes to yield time for discussion?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing that ample time should be given to discuss the bill. There will be no attempt made to cut off debate.

I will say to the House that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures held hearings on this bill for two days during this session and also during the Sixty-fourth Congress. There appeared before the committee representatives from the War Department, from the Navy Department, from the Bureau of Standards——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, we have a very efficient Bureau of Standards, and I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain why it is necessary to have a commission in addition to the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I am only making a brief preliminary statement about the bill. The author of the bill is the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who has a far better knowledge of the details of it than I have. He has a technical knowledge of the subject, and I expect to yield to him in a moment or two to explain the purposes of the bill. I will say, however, that it is the opinion of the Director of the Bureau of Standards that a law or mandate from Congress requiring the standardization of screw threads is more certain to cause this standardization to be effected than to leave it to any existing general law or authority.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman being chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I thought he might answer that very proper question as to why we should create a commission when we already have the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this same suggestion was made to the Director of the Bureau of Standards, to a rear admiral in the Navy, and to an Army officer, as it was the opinion of a majority of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures that they now had authority to do the very thing that this bill proposes to do, but these three gentlemen were of the opinion that more legislation was necessary and desirable.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman is going to turn the explanation over to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], that will be satisfactory. We should have an explanation from some one.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I expect to do so in a moment.

Mr. Chairman, we had a representative before the committee from the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and a representative from the Society of Automotive Engineers and from various manufacturing concerns in the country, and all were strongly in favor of this bill.

So far as I know, there has been no opposition presented to the bill by any Member of the House. If there has been, it has not been referred to the committee or brought to my attention. The bill seems to meet with the general approval of the manufacturing interests as well as the various branches of the Government which would be affected.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In making up commissions, is it customary to write into the statute that a part of the personnel shall be nominated by societies or associations throughout the country?

Mr. ASHBROOK. There are two members of the commission, a minority representation, who are to be selected from the two societies that are most directly interested and concerned in this bill.

Mr. WALSH. But does the gentleman think we ought to make up a commission to represent societies, or to represent the United States?

Mr. ASHBROOK. We have a majority representation of the United States on the commission.

Mr. WALSH. Why not permit Henry Ford to nominate somebody to represent him?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am a strong admirer of Henry Ford.

Mr. WALSH. Or why not permit various other societies to nominate men to represent them? I wondered if it was customary in this sort of legislation to write into the law a provision that these men are to be nominated by the Society of Automotive Engineers or the Society of Mechanical Engineers. I have no doubt they would nominate competent, able men; but it seems to me it is open to some question whether it ought to be written into the law that they should be permitted to participate in making up a commission to represent the Government. I simply want to get the idea of the committee.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The Army, Navy Department, Department of Commerce, or rather the Bureau of Standards, all favor the proposition that these societies shall be represented on the commission. As they are to serve without compensation and have a technical knowledge of the things to be done, the standardization of screw threads, the committee was disposed to yield to the advice and judgment of these three departments of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the same two men could be appointed without having it provided in the bill that the society could participate in making up the Federal commission.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true. Mr. Chairman, I yield so much time to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the author of the bill, as he may require.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it may not be known to the membership of the House generally that the number of screws manufactured in the United States daily amount to over 100,000,000. This does not include wood screws, which are not screws in the sense which an engineer deals with them, but only screws with a tap to fit them. A number of different standards for screw threads have been established in this country, as well as in foreign countries. It is hoped that the number of these may be eventually reduced. There has never been an attempt, however, to establish a general standard of tolerances for screw threads, and this is the work it is expected that the commission provided for in this bill will take up and accomplish. Different learned societies have taken the matter up, notably the Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Society of Automotive Engineers. You will understand that every machine of almost every kind that is made, whether large or small, is not only assembled largely by means of screws, but most of the adjustments of measuring devices, tools, and machines, some of them very fine and delicate, are made by means of screws.

It is asked why does not the Bureau of Standards provide a standard and promulgate it. That question was asked directly of Dr. Stratton, and he said he thought it might be done, that he might be authorized to formulate a standard of his own and promulgate it. The Bureau of Standards, however, is engaged in other work, which it is instructed to do by law.

The Navy Department has already gone into the question of setting certain standards for its own use. The Army has had to do it to a certain extent. The Army has called in eminent engineers from the two societies mentioned here and others outside of them, to help the Army arrive at what is a proper standard.

I hope you all understand what a standard of tolerances means. First, there is absolute perfection of fit. We all know that in the manufacture of metals, the same as in human affairs, perfection is unattainable. It is physically as well as commercially impossible. Moreover, no good purpose would be served by attempting to approximate too closely to perfection of fit in the manufacture of metals. The question, then, is as to how far from the line of perfection, which is unattainable in all terrestrial things, should the manufacturer of screws be permitted to deviate in order to enable him to manufacture them commercially. You will understand that if you require an impossible standard or attempt to approximate too closely to perfection, it simply impedes production, without any corresponding gain in utility. You can not proceed with the manufacture of an article unless a proper allowance is made, or, as it is usually called, a commercial allowance.

For a number of years the subject of screw-thread tolerances has been under discussion by engineers and manufacturers of articles from metal. The two societies mentioned in this bill have gone about it, each independently working at the problem. Finally they conferred together, and have come to Washington asking that Congress authorize the establishment of a commission. It is confidently believed that such a commission will be able to bring together the data already gathered by these societies, by the War and the Navy Departments, and by others, and determine the proper standard of screw-thread tolerances in the manufacture of screws.

In determining the proper allowances in the manufacture of screws there are five different things to be standardized. First is what we call the lead; that is, the number of threads per inch. Then there is the angle; that is, the angle between the threads. Then there are the diameters. Three diameters are required—first, the outside diameter from the crest of the screw thread to the crest on the other side; second, what is called the root diameter, from the bottom of the thread to the bottom of the thread on the other side; third, and a very important item, is the pitch diameter, which is measured from the center of the thread on one side to the center of the thread on the other side.

I have brought before you a diagram showing a 2-inch screw used on an autotruck. It was brought to me from the Quartermaster General's office, which has charge of the motor transportation for the Army. This is a 2-inch screw magnified.

Mr. KREIDER. The gentleman says a 2-inch screw; does he mean diameter or length?

Mr. TILSON. Two inches in diameter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it the thought that after the commission has acted it is to be followed by Federal legislation of some sort fixing that as a standard?

Mr. TILSON. It is provided in the bill that after the commission, composed of three representatives of the Government and two eminent engineers nominated by these two societies, but actually appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, has determined what the proper standards are the Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate the standards, have them printed as a public document, and thereafter it shall be required in all Army and Navy specifications that those standards shall be put into the specifications. There is no penalty, as gentlemen will note, and if private manufacturers do not wish to use it they do not have to do so, except in work they do for the Government.

Private manufacturers, however, desire this done just as much as anybody else. They would like to have the standard of tolerance for screw threads uniform all over the United States, so that if you went into one store and bought a half-inch bolt, for instance, of a certain description, you could go into any other store in the United States and buy a bolt that answered to the same description, and you could take the nut off the one and it would fit the screw of the other.

Mr. WINSLOW. The purpose of the bill is merely for the sake of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. TILSON. It is not for the Army and Navy alone.

Mr. WINSLOW. I understood the gentleman to say so.

Mr. TILSON. No; it is desired very much by the Army and the Navy, because just at this time the Army and the Navy both are drawing largely upon the manufacturing resources of the country, and they have felt more than ever before the necessity for having a uniform standard that will be used by all private manufacturers as well as the Navy and the Army themselves.

Mr. WINSLOW. Then, the proposition is to get a compulsory standard for everybody in the country?

Mr. TILSON. It is compulsory only in this respect, that anyone who bids on work for the Army and Navy must bid upon specifications containing these standards.

Mr. WINSLOW. Can not they specify them anyway, without having a law passed?

Mr. TILSON. The trouble is there is no generally accepted standard to specify.

Mr. WINSLOW. They can describe the screws perfectly well.

Mr. TILSON. There is nobody who has determined what shall be the proper standard of tolerance in screw threads. The Navy has acted independently. The Army has done not quite so much. We wish to have determined standards that will be uniform for all similar work. The Army and Navy both want it; engineers everywhere urge it; manufacturers are agreed to it; and no one, so far as I have heard, opposes it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, is this a matter that will require very much time on the part of the commission?

Mr. TILSON. It is stated in the bill itself that it shall terminate its work within a year.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it likely to require anything like that length of time?

Mr. TILSON. No. It is expected that frequent sessions will be held and that the results arrived at by these gentlemen will be tabulated by clerks in the interim between the meetings of the commission. While the scientific work will not require their entire time, by any means, or a very large part of it, nevertheless they will have to meet from time to time, determine the various standards for the five different items I have mentioned in regard to the screw and for the different grades of work, whether it be fine or coarse, or what is called a tight fit, a medium fit, or a loose fit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The bill provides, I believe, that the members of the commission itself shall serve without compensation?

Mr. TILSON. That is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But I understand the gentleman to say that there is work that will have to be done by clerks in the interim between the sessions.

Mr. TILSON. It is so expected.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman give the House any idea of about how large a force is going to be required?

Mr. TILSON. Very small, as I understand it. Dr. Stratton, of the Bureau of Standards, thought there would be no difficulty about that. He will attend to that side of it, as it will probably be done under his direction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman really does not know how large a force is likely to be employed?

Mr. TILSON. I understand that it will be extremely small.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. COX. In the main I think I am in sympathy with the purpose of this bill, but I want to put this question to the gentleman. This bill contemplates the appointment of five commissioners. The gentleman has said that these commissioners will meet from time to time and hold sessions. We have been confronted since this war broke out with different commissions. For instance, we have had the Aircraft Board and, as I recollect now, probably three or four different commissions or bodies that had control of that kind of work. To my mind, they were working at cross purposes. Take the Shipping Board——

Mr. TILSON. It is intended to stop that working at cross purposes in this particular thing.

Mr. COX. I shall come to the question in a moment. The Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation it is apparent were not getting very far until the power to build ships was taken entirely away from those boards and centered in one man's hands. My query is this: Suppose you appoint your commission of five men and then they have sessions at intervals, what does the gentleman think as to whether or not there will be any danger of the commission of five men fighting one another and finding themselves at cross purposes with each other, just like the other various boards, and instead of advancing work actually delaying it?

Mr. TILSON. I wish the gentleman to understand that this is one of those things where there is a universal desire to get together. It is to the advantage of each member, or the cause represented by him, that they all get together, rather than pull apart, and the sole purpose of the commission is that there may be one standard. It does not matter so much to the manufacturer whether it is one standard or another standard. All he desires is that there shall be one standard, a reasonable, commercial standard, so that everybody will use the same yardstick in making his measurements. This commission will be interested, every man of them, in having unanimity rather than working at cross purposes.

Mr. COX. That will be true if the commission will get together and agree among themselves; but suppose they do not do that. Let me put this question to the gentleman: Grant that the private manufacturers are in favor of it——

Mr. TILSON. They have come before the committee, by their representatives, in considerable numbers.

Mr. COX. I take it now that the Army and Navy Departments are dependent almost entirely upon private screws, are they not?

Mr. TILSON. Largely.

Mr. COX. Well, now, suppose this bill becomes a law and the private manufacturers who are now making screws for the Army and Navy Departments, seeing this bill ahead of them, are they going to let up in the manufacture of screws until this commission meets? If so, it looks to me there might be some danger of a shortage of screws.

Mr. TILSON. In the first place, the Government really controls the commission, anyway. It controls the nature of the report and its representatives control the time of its being put out. If they thought there was any danger of that kind, they could hold it back and not promulgate it, or perhaps promulgate it to take effect at some other time. They certainly would not deliberately promulgate a standard that would interfere with the very work they contemplated.

Mr. COX. I hope that will be true, yet we hoped the Shipping Board would do quite different from the way they did do, and that the Aircraft Board and things like that should not have proceeded as they have proceeded.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman certain of his position made in reply to the query propounded by the gentleman from Indiana? The fear I have is that if this bill is adopted it may result in some hardship and hindrance, not only to the War and Navy in the use of these standards but in the adoption of it by manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Establishments. This bill proposes that this commission must make its recommendations within one year, and it further proposes that those recommendations must be promulgated by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce upon acceptance and approval.

There is no authority, so far as this bill is concerned, granting the privilege to either of these department heads to determine when their recommendations should go into effect, and we might have this arbitrary situation of having a standard fixed within a period of 12 months as to the character of bolts that should be used in machinery and the manufacturers would not be able to meet those requirements, because they could not, under these stressed conditions, obtain the necessary dies to meet the requirements laid down by this commission on standards. This is a very serious practical question, and I wish to amplify it still further by this query as to whether Great Britain has any standards as to screw threads and whether that standard as to all makes of machinery is not different from the standard adopted by the large bolt manufacturers of this country. Now, in these war times, when it is necessary for us—I trust I am not taking up too much of the gentleman's time.

Mr. TILSON. It is all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. When it is necessary for us to avail ourselves to the utmost of machinery and all adjuncts that enter into that machinery to establish a standard, as this bill proposes, and to have it go into effect in one year, without leaving to the heads of the departments any discretion to determine when it shall be adopted, seems to me a very important and serious innovation, indeed.

Mr. TILSON. I am glad the gentleman has raised these questions, because they are very natural and pertinent questions. In the first place, as to Great Britain: Great Britain has within the present year—in fact, within the last month—called her standards committee together in conference for this very purpose.

They held a conference in London in the month of April, which a number of eminent engineers from this country attended. They conferred with our representatives—that is, engineers from this country—as to the possibility of international standards being adopted hereafter. If such a commission as this is appointed, it would have a proper legal standing to enter into negotiation or conference with international committees or commissions for that very purpose. In fact, that is one of the things we hope to come out of this commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any representative of any manufacturing establishment come before the committee to testify as to the practicability, after the commission sets the standard, as to the ability to put their recommendations into force to meet the requirements of the Army and Navy in these war times?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; there were a number of manufacturers who appeared before the committee, and a much larger number who indicated through various engineers who appeared before us their belief in and advocacy of this bill. Especially those who have to do with the manufacture of screws, taps, dies, and other things for the making of screws were all in accord in favor of the establishment of proper standards for screw threads, and especially of tolerances for screw threads.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield further, in glancing over the hearings, handed me by the chairman of the committee, I can only find the statement of one manufacturer—Mr. F. O. Wells, president of the Greenfield Tap & Die Corporation—and I do not find any testimony on the part of any other manufacturer in support of this bill.

Mr. TILSON. Let me explain to the gentleman why that appears in that way. A similar bill was introduced by me in the closing days of the Sixty-fourth Congress. We had a hearing on it before a subcommittee of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. A number of manufacturers, engineers, Army officers, naval officers, and Dr. Stratton, appeared at that time and were heard, and those hearings were printed during the last Congress.

When the present bill was introduced by me into this Congress, the chairman of the committee thought it of sufficient importance for the whole committee to hear it, and they gave us a hearing. Instead, however, of bringing the same men who were here the year before, to be heard again, the committee in its consideration had before it the hearings of the previous year, which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] can get by sending to the committee room.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt, I wish to say that I will send to the committee room and get copies of the hearings held on this bill in the Sixty-fourth Congress, at which time, as the gentleman states, there were a number of representatives of business interests who appeared before the subcommittee.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a single question. Is Dr. Stratton for this bill?

Mr. TILSON. He is.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will vote for it.

Mr. TILSON. He was twice before the committee—this year and last year. Dr. Stratton, as you know, believes in standardization, and he realizes that such a commission will help very materially. In my judgment, it is the only way by which he can carry out effectively and expeditiously what he and I agree to be a matter of great importance to the manufacturing industries of this country.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know anything about it, but I think he is the best authority in the United States, if not in the world, touching this matter.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman and I are in accord on that subject, and I wish to state to the gentleman that Dr. Stratton is very much in favor of this bill. He appeared twice before the committee, and I am sure from private conversation with him that he believes that great good will come out of this not only for the War and Navy Departments, but especially in the great private manufacturing interests of this country, and that the benefit will not be only temporary and transient, but that it will be lasting, going on into the future.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW].

Mr. WINSLOW. I merely wanted to ask if the experience of the automobile manufacturers is not an illustration of the desirability of passing this very law?

Mr. TILSON. It is.

Mr. WINSLOW. I think if gentlemen realized that fact it would help them very much toward reaching a conclusion.

Mr. TILSON. At first each automobile manufacturer had a standard of his own. After undergoing that experience for a while, they determined that it was essential that they should get together and determine upon some sort of a standard, and they did so. They had no legislation back of it, but for their own convenience and for the sake of the public they got together and established certain standards. These same engineers have come before this committee and have asked that all the engineers of the country get together, that the Army and Navy Ordnance Departments get together with them, and that they establish one universal system of standards for screw-thread tolerances.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to ask if you do not think that, in order to prevent any more ghastly failures, we had best have this commission selected by Congress?

Mr. TILSON. It is, practically, because the bill itself takes care of it. I think, in the first place, the most appropriate selection is that of the Chief of the Bureau of Standards as the chairman of the commission. In view of the large amount of metal manufacturing done by the War Department, it should have a representative on the commission. The same is true of the Navy. Then I believe that the engineers of the country more nearly represent the private industries of the country, so far as manufacturing is concerned, than anyone else, and that the bringing in of these two engineers will be of great assistance to the other officials. More than that, it will tend to popularize this standardization or make it more acceptable to the great manufacturing industries of the country.

Mr. COX. Right in connection with what the gentleman said in his closing remarks, and also in connection with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says, about Dr. Stratton, I am for the bill——

Mr. TILSON. I am glad the gentleman is.

Mr. COX. That is, the Stratton end of it. But is not the gentleman afraid that he is going to hamper and in a measure tie the hands of Dr. Stratton when he consents to put on two engineers from private life?

Mr. TILSON. No. I would give Dr. Stratton the greatest help I could possibly give him, and I think I am doing just that in this bill.

Mr. COX. Has Dr. Stratton ever told the gentleman he wanted these two extra engineers?

Mr. TILSON. He appeared before the committee and favored this bill when it contained a provision for four engineers. I am sure he is not alarmed about the number of engineers. In fact, no one knows better than Dr. Stratton the valuable assistance that he will get from these men.

Mr. COX. I hope he will get it, but I am very much alarmed about it.

Mr. TILSON. I am sure he will get it, because the engineers are much interested in this matter, and they are an able body of men and will be ably represented on this commission.

Now I yield to my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. As I take it, the idea of this bill is to help manufacturing and not prevent it.

Mr. TILSON. That is true.

Mr. MERRITT. And if that is true, is it not true that the delegates from the automotive engineers and the mechanical engineers would recommend such standards as would further manufacturing?

Mr. TILSON. That is true. The gentleman speaks from experience as a representative of one of the most efficient and up-to-date manufacturing concerns in the whole country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Section 2 provides:

> Such standards, when thus accepted and approved, shall be adopted and used in the several manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Departments, and, so far as practicable, in all specifications for screw threads in proposals for manufactured articles, parts, or materials to be used under the direction of these departments.

That would involve a radical change in machinery in the various plants, would it not?

Mr. TILSON. No; not in machinery. It may involve in some cases a slight change of tools, but not of machinery.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will let me put the question in the form of a statement, perhaps I can make it clearer. It may be that by reason of the change in plans or in machinery or in tools, as the gentleman has indicated, that there might be great delay in the manufacture of such tools as would be needed for war purposes, and the question is whether that would be the result of the passage of the bill?

Mr. TILSON. No. I went into that very fully with the engineers and manufacturers. Here is what I got from them: Metal tools are very rapidly used up. Three months is considered a sort of standard for the life of a cutting tool. Some last longer and some not so long. Gentlemen can see that as soon as a standard is set, all the tools thereafter would be ordered according to this standard, and there being no penalty they could go on using the old tools as long as they lasted. Probably before the bill went into effect or before they got any Government work all the tools would be of the new standard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But after the passage of this law I assume no contracts would be made unless in compliance therewith. But how would it affect existing contracts made prior to the passage of the law?

Mr. TILSON. It would not affect existing contracts. There is no penalty, as the gentleman understands, and the only requirement is that in future specifications hereafter to be drawn such standards shall be required.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It being the law that the screw thread shall be of this standard, and a contract made prior to the law pending, would it not operate harshly on the contractor if the Government should say, "We desire to have these screws made now in accordance with the law"?

Mr. TILSON. Only specifications sent out after the law went into effect would be affected. These could not change a pre-existing contract. The gentleman will understand that this is not going to be the making of entirely new standards, but it will be an acceptance, perhaps, in a large measure of some of the standards already in existence.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman sees no danger of infringing upon existing contracts?

Mr. TILSON. Not the slightest.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I understand the object of this bill is to have every bolt of the same size and standard thread?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. For instance, if I am a farmer and have a reaper, and a bolt breaks in that reaper, I can not get any bolt from any other concern but the one that manufactures that reaper. Is it the object of this bill that all bolts of like dimensions shall be of the same standard, so that I can go to any hardware store and buy a bolt of the same standard?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. The intention is that ultimately every nut of a bolt of any particular size, type, or description will fit every screw of the same size, type, or description of bolt wherever they may come together.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. If this bill is passed, I can send to the hardware store and will not have to send to the manufacturer?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. It is hoped that it will ultimately eventuate that way. A standardization of bolts would be a very desirable thing.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Are the manufacturers willing?

Mr. TILSON. They are not only willing, they are eager for these standards.

I wish to say in this connection that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures very thoroughly considered this bill. Committees of this House are usually selected from Members scattered all over the country, but in considering this bill this committee were all from Missouri. They all had to be shown. The committee started out in a very critical frame of mind, resolved that they must be shown that no harm would come from this bill and that it would serve a good purpose.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I have had many inquiries as to why this matter is not left with the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. TILSON. There are a great many reasons. In the first place, as I stated a little earlier in my remarks, the Bureau of Standards already has a number of things that it is doing under the direct and positive requirement of law. This is not one of them. Dr. Stratton, the Director of the Bureau of Standards, admitted that he might go ahead and do it by himself, but he and others connected with this matter feel that it would help immensely if it were given the prestige and standing that legislation on the subject would give to it. The appointment of a commission by legislative authority to do this thing will help all over the country to cause people to know about it and accept it more readily if it comes about in this way.

Mr. FESS. Then I understand that the head of the Bureau of Standards would prefer to have it left with the commission instead of with the bureau?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. He realizes that he will get invaluable help from these engineers and from the War and Navy Departments, and he realizes that a standard formulated in that way will be much more readily accepted than if he proceeded to do it on his own questionable authority.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to say to my colleague [Mr. FESS] that it was the opinion of the members of the committee when this bill was first brought before it for consideration that the Director of the Bureau of Standards already had the authority to do what is sought to be done under this bill. That question was propounded to the Director of the Bureau of Standards, and he seemed to be of opinion that a special mandate from Congress, a law requiring the doing of this certain thing, would have more effect and would accomplish more than he could hope to do without the passage of this bill. The committee were of a doubtful turn of mind; I will say that. We had hearings for four days on this bill, and it was only because of the representations of the Army and the Navy and the Director of the Bureau of Standards, and the insistence of the author of the bill, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], that we decided to report the bill favorably.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. LONERGAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will yield first to the gentleman from Alabama; then to my colleague from Connecticut.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. As I understand the provisions of this bill, the commission has got to make its investigations and final report within one year after the passage of the act?

Mr. TILSON. The engineers present, Dr. Stratton, and others all agreed that it could be done within that time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When they reach an agreement on that standard, how is that to be put into practical effect among the manufacturers of this country?

Mr. TILSON. It is to be promulgated by the Secretary of Commerce and printed as a public document by him. Thereafter it is to be used in the arsenals and navy yards of the country and, so far as practicable, put into all specifications thereafter given by the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that your bill provides that, as to contracts for the Army and Navy, these specifications are mandatory after the commission has agreed upon a standard?

Mr. TILSON. So far as practicable.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But it does not affect general commercial enterprises?

Mr. TILSON. It is not compulsory, but it is expected to affect them very much, because they are eager to have a standard. There is no penalty. The bill carries its own penalty because of the great desirability and great advantage of all having a uniform standard.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I promised to yield first to my colleague from Connecticut.

Mr. LONERGAN. The gentleman first introduced in the Sixty-fourth Congress a bill, something like 18 months ago. That is true?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. LONERGAN. And there were hearings on that bill?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; before a subcommittee.

Mr. LONERGAN. And notice was given to all who might be interested—not only Government officials, but those engaged in manufacturing?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. I took pains to do that myself—to notify metal manufacturers very widely, especially those who make screw machinery and tools and so on, so far as I could reach them.

Mr. LONERGAN. And, to the gentleman's knowledge, was there any opposition offered to the bill on the part of either officials or manufacturers?

Mr. TILSON. There has never been the slightest opposition that I have heard from anyone, and I have my files full of letters from eminent engineers and from manufacturers all over the country favoring it.

Mr. LONERGAN. I will ask the gentleman, In the opinion of the officials in the War and Navy Departments, if this standard had been fixed prior to our entrance into the war, would it not have been of material assistance to this Government and to the allies?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has brought out a point that I am very glad he mentioned, because it is correct. I have had the most positive information that freak threads, as they might be called, have interfered as much as any other one thing in a number of very important matters in connection with the present war. I am informed that this one thing has interfered to some extent with the aviation program that we hear so much about just now; that it has been hampered by this very lack of uniformity in the matter of screw threads.

Mr. WINSLOW. There is a screw loose somewhere.

Mr. TEMPLE. As I understand, the passage of this bill would not scrap any machinery or cause any manufacturer to throw a single tool into the waste heap, and the only force there would be to put this into effect would be that the manufacturer would find it convenient to conform to the universal standard, rather than to manufacture things that were not of a size that some people might want to put them to. We have had recently an example of passing a law without a penalty—the law changing the clock. If any man does not want to change his clock or set his watch there is no penalty, except that he finds himself absolutely out of harmony with everybody else.

Mr. TILSON. He will miss his train.

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has stated the matter well. I do not mean that there may not be anything scrapped. In case a man has some tools that are used very seldom, which may last an indefinite time, and some of them may be tools that are out of standard, there may possibly have to be some of them scrapped, but any enterprising manufacturer would agree at once that that was trifling as compared with the great advantage to be gained on the other side.

Mr. TEMPLE. There is nothing, however, to compel him to scrap anything.

Mr. TILSON. Not at all.

Mr. TEMPLE. If he scraps anything it is because he finds it to his advantage to do so.

Mr. TILSON. That is correct.

Mr. PLATT. The tools used in making screw threads are taps and dies, which are small and not very expensive, and many of them are now within the standard.

Mr. TILSON. Yes. It is not going to be a serious matter at all. The manufacturers have had an opportunity to protest against that side of it, and not one of them has done so.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman from Connecticut will yield to me——

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I wish to inform the committee that at the hearings held on this bill on January 27 and February 5, 1917, there appeared before the committee Mr. E. H. Ehrman, of Chicago, representing the Chicago Screw Co.; Mr. Horace K. Jones, of the Corbin Screw Co., of Hartford, Conn.; Mr. Frank O. Wells, president of the Springfield Tap & Die Co., of Springfield, Mass., and three or four other representatives of influential concerns and companies who are interested and affected by the passage of this bill, and they all were strongly in favor of its passage.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman states it correctly. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WEBB. I ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD a letter from the Attorney General and a letter from the War Industries Board concerning the manufacture of silk in the Atlanta Penitentiary. I want them printed in the back of the RECORD and not in the proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, just a moment longer on these diagrams. I have presented here a diagram which shows a screw enlarged. The spaces above the middle line are very much magnified and represent thousandths of an inch. Those above the line represent thousandths of an inch in the tap thread and below the line thousandths of an inch in the screw thread. If screws could be made an absolute fit, which is an impossibility, they would conform to an imaginary line through the center of that chart. The smallest possible technical allowance is figured there at one ten-thousandth. That is so fine that it is impracticable.

Mr. GARNER. Imaginary.

Mr. TILSON. Almost imaginary. The smallest possible practical allowance is given at five ten-thousandths. That is about as close as any screw can be commercially made to fit.

I have here projected on another chart what that means. Here is a thread magnified 50 diameters. If that screw fitted perfectly it would conform to this outside line. It can not be made to fit perfectly, but the zone of tolerance is indicated by the space between the line at the apex of the screw thread down to that double line. Anywhere between those two points would be considered a perfect screw. That would be within the tolerance allowed. The zone indicated by the shaded marking is called the tolerance zone.

I have here a diagram showing a number of threads magnified 50 diameters, the same as the other, and I call attention to how imperfect some of those screw threads are. On this lower line are some threads in commercial screws greatly magnified, showing the discrepancies.

I present here a chart made up of screws taken from 26 different hardware stores. Some one went to different hardware stores, buying in each a box of the same description of nuts and bolts. They were supposed to be exactly the same, answering the same description. It was attempted to put them together, taking the nuts off from one lot and putting them on the screws of the others. I have here delineated the result. If the screws had exactly fitted they would have come across the middle line and the line would be straight. The variations are shown here, some being so wide that the taps would not go on the screws at all and some being so loose that you could put them on and spin them with one finger until they went the entire length of the screw. Yet they were all supposed to be exactly the same.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. I think what the gentleman refers to is the result of faulty manufacture. The one thing I was interested in is whether the commission so appointed would probably recommend in ordinary nut bolts to have a certain number of threads per inch—on the 3-inch bolt, the half-inch bolt, and the inch bolt, and so forth.

Mr. TILSON That is one of the five points I mentioned—that is, the lead, the number of threads per inch.

Mr. KREIDER. I want to know whether the committee took into consideration the fact that iron bolts used by farmers, a cheap bolt, and differentiated between those and the steel bolt that is used to bolt up two pieces of steel or iron which must have so many more threads per inch.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; and the degree of tolerance is very different. The commission will probably report tolerances in class A, class B, and class C, and so on, applying to different kinds of work, so that the gentleman's mowing machine might be put upon one basis while finer machinery might be put upon another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. TILSON. Further replying to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, not only would there be a different standard, as far as lead is concerned, but a different standard of the tolerance of the thread allowed to different classes of work. So that work requiring a very tight and accurate fit would be in one class and a very loose fit in another. I will state to the gentleman that in the manufacture of ordnance there is one article that requires a higher degree of accuracy than any other, and that is the thread of the gun barrel. It has to be extremely accurate, so that it would be in class A or class AA of work when you come to the matter of accuracy of fit. Then down the line in articles where there is no necessity of being a tight fit it would not be required. If a tight fit is unnecessarily required, it might be a great loss to the Government or the individual. All that is what this commission is to determine.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In my original question I asked whether the English system of measuring standard screws was not based on the metric system, whereas in this country our manufacturers have adopted the other system.

Mr. TILSON. The standard would have to be made in both, because at the present time we are manufacturing many things by the English method by inches and feet, but we are also manufacturing, as the gentleman knows, the 75-millimeter and the 155-millimeter gun and ammunition to fit them. A number of things we are manufacturing under the metric system, so that the standard would have to be made universal, so that it could be used either way, either by the metric system or any other. There is no attempt here to change the standard to the metric system or to fix any other system of measure.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is proposed to have two different standards?

Mr. TILSON. No; the same standard, but work it out for the metric system and for the other system also. It would have to be so on account of the number of things we are manufacturing according to the metric system in this country, but it will not require the metric system to be used.

This is a very technical and perhaps difficult matter to understand, but I am convinced, after a somewhat prolonged study of the subject, that it is of very great importance in the progress of the metal industry in this country. I believe it will serve a useful purpose, and in that I am backed by the officers of the Army, the Navy, the Bureau of Standards, and eminent engineers representing the manufacturing industries all over the country.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I am in entire sympathy with what the gentleman has said, but I recall in a speech the gentleman made some time ago he spoke of the difficulty of getting dies and jigs and other mechanical devices when the pattern of the guns was changed. Would there be any such difficulty in changing the standard of screws so as to throw commercial enterprises into confusion?

Mr. TILSON. No. I referred to that a little earlier in my remarks. Perhaps the gentleman was called out of the Hall just at that moment, but I have gone into that very thoroughly with the manufacturers and engineers, and they are convinced that the number of tools that will eventually have to be changed will be absolutely trifling, because tools wear out very rapidly. The tooling up of a manufacturing concern must be done over and over and over again. As soon as the standard is fixed all of the new tools will be made according to the new standard, and the gentleman understands that this is not intended to change the whole system or change the standard of the screw thread perhaps at all, but it is simply to standardize what proper commercial allowances are in the manufacture of screws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has again expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I was one of the subcommittee of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures that investigated this subject at the last session, and as the industry of screw manufacturing was unfolded by the witnesses who appeared before that committee, and their handicaps under the present conditions told us, the more convincing it became that this bill was a great necessity. It may seem trifling at first, no doubt, to consider a matter of this kind, but when we heard these manufacturers, representing many millions of dollars of capital, tell us the need for this legislation we all became convinced that the proper thing for Congress to do was to pass the bill. The great secret of American success, the great characteristic of American business and industry, is standardization. That is the keynote in many factories which spells success, and this bill merely standardizes the toleration in the manufacture of screws.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman whether in the hearings to which he refers any consideration was given as to the practicability by the manufacturers of bolts and nuts adjusting themselves within a year to these new standards? In glancing over the hearings of both this year and last year I do not find any reference being made as to the practicability of adjustment. We all agree, of course, that a standard thread would be a great advantage in the trade generally, but the idea I have in mind is as to whether the manufacturing establishments can within a year adjust themselves to the new conditions.

Mr. HICKS. Let me answer the gentleman by stating this, that, while I do not recall in detail what transpired a year ago, in talking this morning with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. MERRITT, of the Yale Lock Co., and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. WINSLOW, and other manufacturers on the floor of Congress, I find they are all of opinion that the manufacturers can very easily adapt themselves to this standardization in a short space of time, and it will not be a handicap to that industry if this bill becomes a law. Let me say this, that this bill, as I take it, does not standardize tolerances as a whole, or at least in the same degree. I mean by that this, that instead of all screws being given the same tolerance, each class of work will have its own special tolerance, which, I think, is different from what most people imagine. In other words, the high-grade work will have small tolerance and the rougher work a larger degree of tolerance, with variations in between. I have nothing further to say on the matter except this, that I do believe, in the interest of efficiency, which is the very thing we are all striving for at the present time, the enactment of this bill into law is of great importance and a necessity of the hour. [Applause.]

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this measure and shall vote for it. I did not obtain time, however, to speak about that, but I do desire to address the committee for a short time concerning a resolution which I introduced this morning to amend Rule XXXIV of the House, providing for admission to the galleries. That resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXXIV of the House Rules be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"The Speaker shall set aside a portion of the west gallery for the use of the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, justices of the Supreme Court, who shall issue tickets of admission for the same.

"The Secretary of State shall issue cards of admission bearing his signature to foreign ministers and suites.

"No other person shall be admitted to any part of the gallery without a card signed by a Member of the House, a Delegate, or one of the officers of the House.

"This rule shall be in effect during the present war.

"This rule shall not abridge in any way Rule XXXV and amendments adopted thereto governing representatives of the press."

During the period of this war it is the duty of this House to guard in every way possible the proceedings in this House that might give aid and comfort to the enemy.

No person should be admitted to the gallery of this House unless he is given a card of admission signed by the President or Vice President of the United States, a member of the President's Cabinet, a judge of the Supreme Court, or is admitted under rules prescribed for the members of the press or by card signed by a Member. We ask the War and Navy Departments to observe secrecy and criticize them if they do not.

We ask the press of this country not to print information that would give aid and comfort to the enemy, and we must admit the press of this country has kept the faith.

Why should we permit anybody and everybody to enter the gallery of this House?

Any citizen of this country who desires admission to the gallery can get it by asking his Congressman or Delegate.

Spies should be kept out. I presume there are persons sitting in the gallery every day this House is in session listening to get any and all the information they can.

While we had the Navy appropriation bill up members of that committee were talking about some things that happened in the hearings before that committee that other members said were confidential. It was not published in the papers, but if the Kaiser's representative was sitting in the gallery he got the information for the Kaiser.

I believe during this war the galleries should be carefully protected.

I sometimes feel that if we did away with the distribution of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, excepting, of course, to Members, officials, and the press, during this war it would be a good thing for the country. It certainly would expedite business and would prevent information going to the enemy. Hearings before committees should be protected. We should do every possible thing we can do to prevent any information reaching the enemy that would injure our cause in any way. Information that the press should not publish would be taken care of by the press censorship.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the debate on this bill and the explanation of it that has already been made by members of the committee leads me to believe that the demand for the enactment of legislation of this kind is a serious reflection upon the efficiency of the chief executive officers of the Army and of the Navy. It appears to me that any necessity for legislation of this character by Congress emphasizes a gross lack of common-sense business practice and coordination between two great departments of the Government. If the chief executive officers of the Army and of the Navy would awaken to their responsibilities and see to it that some of the things are done that would be done by good business men in private business there would be no need for Congress to waste valuable time in the consideration of a bill of this character. If there has been and is need for standardization of screw threads, there is no good reason why executive officials of the Army and Navy should not have gotten together and adopted standards for screw threads and for dies and gauges and required these standards to be used in manufacturing supplies for the Government. There is no good reason under the sun why it should be necessary for Congress to waste valuable time in enacting legislation for the appointment of a commission to do the work that should have been properly done by executive officials of the Army and of the Navy. I must confess that I am not greatly surprised to find that officers of the Army and Navy whose business it properly has been to have done this work have not done it, and that no standards for screw threads have been adopted in all the years that there has been need for such standardization. From what I have seen of the indifference and lack of common-sense business ability on the part of some of the highest officers in the Army and Navy, I am not surprised that they have not displayed initiative or energy enough to get together and agree upon these standards and put them into force. The trouble in this case is of the same kind that exists in other cases where a woeful lack of efficiency evidences itself all through both the Army and the Navy. The reason that standards have not long since been adopted by the Army and the Navy is because the officers whose business it properly is to do such work have avoided the responsibility and have left it to be done by some one else, and it has not been done at all. In the Army and Navy there seems to be a studied attempt on the part of executive officers to shift responsibility to the other fellow. Instead of there being an effort on the part of every executive officer in the Army and Navy to do his utmost to bring about the highest efficiency in the work of the Army and Navy, the effort on the part of each one seems to be directed to do as little as possible and to do nothing to-day that can be left undone until to-morrow. Evidence of this fact is made plain in the condition that exists at present in the work of the program for the construction of aeroplanes for the Army. In this work it is mighty difficult to find any executive who considers himself responsible for the real accomplishment of any part of the program. From what I have observed of the mental attitude of many of the executive officers of the Army and Navy I should expect that if you went to an executive official in the Navy Department and talked to him in regard to the standardization of screw threads he would at once say that that was not any part of his business.

The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, too, would be very likely to disclaim all responsibility for the failure on the part of their subordinates to have these standards adopted and required in all specifications for supplies for the Army and Navy. The fact is it is time for executive officers of the Army and Navy to realize that the common people of this country are going to, and have a right to, hold them responsible for results. They are going to be held responsible for real results and for efficiency in the Army and Navy, and rightly so, no matter how greatly they may wish to avoid their just responsibilities. If, as the gentlemen of the committee represent to the House, there has been and is a great and crying need for the thing to be done that is proposed to be done under authority of this bill, then some executive officers in the Army and some executive officers in the Navy are grossly at fault because it has not been done long since. Chief executive officers of the Army and the Navy, in cooperation with the Bureau of Standards, should have long ago recommended the standardization of screw threads that is proposed to be done by the commission authorized under the provisions of this bill.

Last week I visited one of the great aviation ground schools at St. Paul, Minn. I found there more than 3,000 enlisted men pursuing courses in the mechanics of aeroplanes and motor vehicles. At this aviation school I observed inside and outside the buildings more than half a hundred fully equipped biplanes. These machines were of the large type, and I presume cost in the neighborhood of between five and ten thousand dollars each. The officer in charge of the school told me that there was not a single one of these planes fit to be used in flying. They were all new machines, fully equipped with engines, propellers, planes, just as they had been turned out from the factory and sold to our Government. I said there were about 50 of these machines. I think that there were, as a matter of fact, nearer a hundred of them. The officer in charge of the school said they had been sent out to him through orders from Washington. The building and grounds of the school were overcrowded with these recently manufactured but useless and out-of-date machines. There was not one of them, I was told, that any aviator would be willing to get into and risk his life in in an attempt to make a flight over the city of St. Paul.

Some executive officer is certainly grossly at fault because these useless biplanes have been sold to the Government and sent away out there to St. Paul. I want to take this opportunity to suggest that the people of this country—the common people, the people that are found in every-day walks of life—are anxious, ready, and willing to support the administration's program in this war. They are giving their money freely and generously to the support of the war, as was evidenced by the recent tremendous contributions to the liberty loan. They are anxious, ready, and willing to support this war, as is further evidenced by the fact that they are sending to the front in this war their boys who are the most precious jewels of their souls. But while the people of the country are anxious, ready, and willing to support the war, they expect, on the part of executive officers of the Government, efficiency and real accomplishments from the expenditure of their money and from the use of the energy, strength, and lifeblood of their sons, and it should not be forgotten that they are going to hold the executive officers of the Government responsible for real accomplishments. Congress is not and will not be held responsible for the things that should and can only be done by executive officers.

In the last analysis, the responsibility for real results lies with the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and in the last analysis, whether the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy wills it or not, the rank and the file of the country will hold him and the chief executives of the different departments of the Government responsible for lack of efficiency in the Army and Navy and for wasteful expenditures of the public funds. The responsibility for results that rightly falls upon the shoulders of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and of the chief executive officers of the different departments of the Government can not be shifted by the appointment of any investigating committee or committees. Congress itself, as well as the rank and file of the people of the country, must depend upon the executive officers of the Government for efficiently carrying into effect the program for the conduct of this war. The individual Members of this Congress, I know, are to-day and have been at all times since the beginning of the war, ready and willing to respond to any request for legislation or appropriations or for cooperation to aid in the conduct of the war that the President may see fit to ask from them. Personally, I think that a commission of five or seven Members for planning and supervising our war program should have been appointed by Congress. However, since the President and his Cabinet have willed otherwise and have assumed to take that responsibility onto themselves, the people of the country—the common men and women of the country—are rightly and justly going to hold the President and his Cabinet responsible for efficiency in the conduct of all the details of the war and for the proper expenditure of the public funds.

In conclusion, I wish to again state that in my judgment the enactment of legislation of the kind proposed in this bill would be wholly unnecessary if executive officers in the Army and in the Navy were awake to their duties and saw to the doing of things that it is their plain duty to have done. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, by just a few scratches of their pens, could have had accomplished and should long since have had done all this legislation seeks to have done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I had a request for five minutes from the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH] but he does not seem to be on the floor of the House. I have no further requests for time on this side. I do not care to prolong the discussion myself further than to say that I think this is an important war measure which should pass. It is in the interest of greater efficiency. It will tend to speed up production, and I feel very sure that the progress of our war work, especially in the production of aeroplanes, has been seriously impeded by the failure in the past to adopt the standards provided for in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This bill does not contemplate any expenditure of public money?

Mr. HUSTED. No expenditure whatever, as I understand it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman care——

Mr. HUSTED. I am corrected as to that statement, it does provide for necessary clerical expenses, but no salaries are carried in the bill.

Mr. TILSON. The only expense I can see that it possibly entails will be for such time as the Army and Navy representatives and the Director of the Bureau of Standards, who are already paid out of Government money, spend on it, and such clerical assistance as they may need in tabulating the results.

Mr. HUSTED. But no salary to anybody.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the point I wanted to bring out, whether by creating a commission to do the work which apparently we have an agency already in existence to do we would be multiplying expenses of the Government for clerical hire?

Mr. HUSTED. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Traveling expenses, and so forth.

Mr. TILSON. So far as the clerical work is concerned, it would require just as much if the Director of the Bureau of Standards was to do this on his own hook, and just as much of his time would be required, probably more, than will be required under this bill, because under this bill he will have the assistance of four other competent men.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. I have no disposition to oppose this legislation, but I desire to know whether the work it proposes could not be done in another way. Would not an order from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to put into effect in the Government a standardization of screw threads accomplish without legislation what this bill proposes to accomplish?

Mr. TILSON. Frankly, I do not believe it would accomplish it at all, and I am somewhat doubtful as to the authority of any official to do it.

Mr. NORTON. Would the gentleman say why it would not accomplish it? All you aim by this bill is to put the standardization in Government use.

Mr. TILSON. There are a good many things you can do by legislation which you can not do by Executive order. While this work might be done by Executive order, I do not think it would be done, and I am perfectly confident it would not be so well done, nor would it meet with the same general acceptance as would the work of a commission constituted in the way this one is.

Mr. HUSTED. I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the Commission for the Standardization of Screw Threads, hereinafter referred to as the commission, which shall be composed of five commissioners, one of whom shall be the Director of the Bureau of Standards, who shall be chairman of the commission; one a commissioned officer of the Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War; one a commissioned officer of the Navy, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and two to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, one of whom shall be chosen from nominations made by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and one from nominations made by the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

As to the appointments to be made by the Secretary of Commerce, which perhaps are the only civil appointments that would be made, are they to be confined to members of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Society of Automotive Engineers?

Mr. TILSON. It is expected that these will be nominated by these societies, and as these societies contain a very large proportion of the engineers of the country it is thereby hoped to have a representation of a very large body of the engineers of this country in these selections.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the board which is to be advisory to the Bureau of Standards, as I understand it——

Mr. TILSON. Is to be a part of the commission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. It is to be made up wholly of officers of the Army and Navy and these accredited engineers?

Mr. TILSON. That is it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Members of established and well-known technical societies?

Mr. TILSON. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So there is no opportunity for the appointment of outside civilians at all?

Mr. TILSON. There will be no opportunity, as I understand it, for the appointment of anybody except those nominated by these societies. But the gentleman will understand that these societies have a large proportion of the engineers of the country in their membership. And I think the country will be assured of the highest possible grade of assistants as chosen from these societies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the provision made in this paragraph is a good one, because there can be no possible concealment of purpose and there can be no political appointment or any personal appointment, as I understand it. I rather wish this provision had held with regard to another bill recently passed by the House and by the other body and approved by the President. That bill gave to an inventor of some mysterious force, which was not very fully explained to the House, the right, in conjunction with the Secretary of a department, to select experts, to determine the value of an alleged discovery of a new-found force. The world has been waiting now for, lo, these three months for the fruition of the hopes of the gentlemen, more or less gullible, who voted for the Garabed privilege. The Department of the Interior has the matter in charge, and up to date, so far as I am informed, there has been no announcement of the distinguished scientists, engineers, or technical experts who were to join hands as between the author of the invention and the department to bring the war to a speedy close. Certain Members of Congress, patriotic to the core and extremely desirous of serving their country, are now sweating legislative blood, I understand, because the object of their confidence has not yet made good. However, it is to be hoped that in due course these gentlemen will be relieved of their anxiety and that we may be speedily enabled to revise our draft lists and our terrific Army and Navy expenditures as Garabed takes the field.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the reason why the names of the distinguished men who were to pass upon the new discovery have been withheld was because of the fear that their knowledge would be discovered by the public to the same extent that Garabed feared that the knowledge he possesses might be discovered by somebody else?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. From all I can learn from newspaper reports of the doings and sayings of Garabed, he has been as mysterious since the passage of the bill giving him an exclusive privilege as he was before the passage of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to ascertain and establish standards for screw threads, which shall be submitted to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce for their acceptance and approval. Such standards, when thus accepted and approved, shall be adopted and used in the several manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Departments, and, so far as practicable, in all specifications for screw threads in proposals for manufactured articles, parts, or materials to be used under the direction of these departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

As I remarked in some queries that I propounded to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the author of this bill, I fear that the difficulty will be in the adjusting of the manufacturing establishments to the new standards that are adopted within the year by this commission. Here in this second sentence you make it mandatory in one case that when such standards are determined and approved they are to be adopted and used in the several manufacturing plants under control of the War and Navy Departments, and in the next clause you relieve these standards of that mandatory acceptance by saying that—so far as practicable, in all specifications for screw threads in proposals for manufactured articles, parts, or materials to be used under the direction of these departments.

In one case you compel all manufacturing establishments under the control of the War and Navy Department to accept those standards and put them in force, and yet in the other instance, so far as specifications are concerned, you give a leeway, making it only enforcible so far as practicable.

Because I fear the difficulty of the adjusting by the manufacturing interests to the practical adoption of these standards, I wish to ask the gentleman whether he would not accept an amendment so as to make it privileged for those standards to be adopted in the several manufacturing establishments when they are found to be practicable, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the respective Secretaries?

That would relieve the difficulty that I have in foreseeing the practical adoption of the recommendations of this commission. Much has been said here about the value of standardization. We all realize that if there was some mechanical device that had never been produced before it would be far better for the Government to adopt a standard than to allow the manufacturers to go ahead haphazardly and adopt different types for themselves. But we realize also that, so far as bolts and screw threads are concerned, there are many different characters of screw threads on the respective bolts required for manufacturing purposes. There are some engines here manufactured in Great Britain, sent over here, parts of motors, and the like. It is perhaps absolutely necessary to use those engines in war facilities; and yet you would require them absolutely to adopt the standard as required by this commission in all manufacturing plants under the control of the War Department and the Navy Department. We do not give the War and Navy Departments any leeway whatever, but say they must be accepted in those manufacturing establishments.

I am somewhat acquainted with the good work performed by the Society of Automotive Engineers in their setting types and standards as to tires and the like, and as to automobile motors, resulting in large economies and savings to the manufacturing trade, but we should not in our haste create hardships and delays in manufacturing. So I am going to offer, Mr. Chairman, the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 2, line 9, after the word "used," insert "so far as practicable under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively."

Mr. STAFFORD. The adoption of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, would make it harmonize with the idea of the committee in leaving it discretionary in a way, so far as the practicability of its adoption is concerned, in the extension of these standards to specifications for manufactured articles, by extending the same leeway in its adoption to manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman assumes, if there is any merit in his contention, that the War and Navy Departments, having approved a standard—and they must approve it before it is of any force whatsoever—having approved a standard and promulgated it, then they must be by legislation excused from using it in the Government arsenals or the factories under the control of the Government.

As a matter of fact, there is no penalty in this bill. There is nothing to compel anybody to use this standard. There is no penalty if they do not use it. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy do not need to approve it unless they wish to do so. As to the words "used as far as practicable in specifications," the reason for that is that there may be, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, cases where it will be for the public interest not to require this particular standard in some specifications that they may issue. So far, however, as providing that the War and Navy Departments may be excused from the application of their own standards, which they have approved and promulgated, it seems to me there is no use for it whatever; that it is really futile, because they have in effect that right to start with.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman recognize that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce, as provided in this section, might agree that a standard should be adopted because it is best for the future development of the industry, and yet there might be exceptional instances where it might not be advisable to have it extended and adopted immediately?

The purpose of my amendment is to grant some leeway to the Secretaries, so that even though they may believe that the standard should be adopted for all time, nevertheless it should be delayed in its enforcement as to specific instances by reason of the difficulty, perhaps, of having the necessary screw threads to meet those prescribed standards. That is the purpose of the amendment I offer.

Mr. TILSON. I am unable to see any utility whatever in the gentleman's amendment, or that it relieves the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy from any embarrassment whatsoever. They will have entire control over this matter to start with, and as a matter of fact, if it is not enforced there is no penalty, and they can not be prosecuted and could not be impeached if they did not approve of such a standard or did not use it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TILSON. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand, then, that it is the purpose of this bill that, after the commission has reported on a respective standard of screw threads, the respective Secretaries shall not approve them in their entirety, but by piecemeal from time to time, as the manufacturing trade enables them to be approved for the best interests of manufacturing?

Mr. TILSON. The bill provides that until so approved by these gentlemen it does not have to be used. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin has the wrong idea, that we are trying to impose something upon some Government official against his will, when all that we are attempting to do here is to furnish standards which they may use, and which they will be glad to use.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have the power to standardize these implements without any law.

Mr. TILSON. They do have, I will say to the gentleman, or try to within their own departments.

Mr. MADDEN. And I understand that this law simply confines the power which they are to exercise to the department over which they have jurisdiction or to the plants manufacturing the articles for the Army and the Navy.

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. To the extent that things can be standardized, they should be standardized. That makes for economy. That makes certain the furnishing of a spare part wherever needed, and makes these spare parts easy to obtain.

I think all this bill does is to find places for five commissioners, whatever their names or titles may be, and whether they will be able to supply knowledge not already in the possession of the Bureau of Standards is a problematical question. I think the Bureau of Standards already has the power to standardize parts of machinery made by the Government under Government contracts, where the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy have jurisdiction over that manufacture under the contract. If the bill proposed to standardize screw threads in every manufacturing plant in the United States and make necessary the purchase and manufacture of new dies in all those establishments, then I think there might possibly be reason to object to the passage of the bill, because that would involve an expenditure by private individuals in the conduct of their business, which perhaps has already been standardized, and where the expenditure would be unnecessary on that account. But since the bill is confined wholly to advice and instruction to Government officials to economize in the conduct of Government business and to facilitate the matter of obtaining parts of machinery of standardized type, there ought not to be any serious objection to it. Personally, I do not think the bill amounts to much. I do not think it involves any problem of great value. Yet it is a step in a direction to which we should all be looking forward, namely, the economical production of the things we need through the process of standardization. Wherever we can get as good machinery by the process of standardization as we can by the complicated method of disunited parts, if I may so state it, and that machinery will perform the functions required of it as well as the machinery that is not standardized, we ought to do it, because we are opening a wider field for competition by enabling more plants to manufacture the things we need than will be the case where each plant has a different system and its own standardization; so that specifications under a standardized output can be made uniform and every plant that can introduce the machinery that is needed will be placed on a par in the matter of competition, and thus reduce the possibility of higher prices in one case and lower prices in another, and reduce them to a standardized price which will be lower in all cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 9, after the word "used," insert "so far as practicable, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively," so that it will read:

"Such standards, when not accepted and approved, shall be adopted and used so far as practicable, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, in the several manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Departments."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate such standards for use by the public and cause the same to be published as a public document.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], is not the language, "and cause the same to be published as a public document," in lines 16 and 17, rather unusual legislative language?

Mr. TILSON. It is. I admit that it is not at all usual. Yet, in considering how the work of this commission might be brought to the attention and made available for the use of private industries at large, it seemed that the manner proposed was probably the best way to bring it about. The gentleman will understand that it is not compulsory upon private industries, but that it is hoped to have it adopted as nearly universally as possible.

Mr. FESS. I had thought of this language:

That the Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate and publish such standards for use by the public.

Mr. TILSON. In what form would the gentleman suggest that he publish it, unless he publishes it as a public document, to make it accessible to the public? That was our only desire, to make this series of standards, when adopted, accessible to the public through the medium of a public document. If the gentleman has any better plan to do it, I should incline to be open to suggestion.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman's idea, then, is not simply to make a publication of this, which might be done through the newspapers, but to publish it in the form of a document for distribution through the document room and folding room?

Mr. TILSON. Possibly; but, at any rate, so that it will be authentic, so that anyone having received it in a public document will know that these are the standards proposed by this commission, and so that every private manufacturer in the country who wishes to conform to these standards and make his tools conform will know what these standards are by sending to Washington and getting a public document in which they are printed officially.

Mr. FESS. And it is the gentleman's opinion that unless you have this phraseology, "cause the same to be published as a public document," it will not be put in the form of a document for distribution?

Mr. TILSON. It might not be, and under this provision of the bill it surely will be. I do not undertake to say that this language is absolutely essential to the efficacy of the bill, but it is the best means I could think of to make this information not only official but readily available.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the commission may adopt rules and regulations in regard to its procedure and the conduct of its business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word. I observe that the next section, section 6, provides:

That the commission shall cease and terminate at the end of one year from the date of its appointment.

To that section I desire to subscribe most heartily. The gentlemen in charge of this bill, including the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who has made it a study, have indicated that the passage of this bill will facilitate our war work. With that understanding I intend to vote for it, although reluctant to create any more commissions. I trust this may be one of the last commissions that we shall create, and am extremely gratified to observe that its tenure of office is to continue for one year only. It is also a matter of some satisfaction to observe that the commission will serve without compensation, and that those members of it who are already paid by the Government shall be paid no more than they now receive, and that there is to be no general expense in consequence of the appointment of this commission except for such clerical services as may be made necessary under the direction of the Chief of the Bureau of Standards. I think all of us in Congress are satisfied that we have a very efficient Chief of the Bureau of Standards, a man of exceptional capability, and one to whom we might properly intrust this kind of work. I think we could have intrusted it to him without inviting the aid of anyone else, but it seemed, in the wisdom of the committee, that it would be well to coordinate the work of the Army and the work of the Navy with that of the Bureau of Standards, in order that we may obtain a uniformity of standards of screw threads as herein provided. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] indicates, and I am very glad he does, that the Director of Standards has requested this form of cooperation. That is another reason why I shall be glad to support the bill. But I would like to say at this stage of the proceedings that a careful reading of the bill has convinced me that there is apparently no political advantage to be had from its passage. I assume, therefore, that Republicans may as readily vote for the bill as Democrats, and that in voting for it they will be doing a patriotic duty and serving their country without regard to party.

Mr. FESS. The author of the bill is a Republican.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman from Ohio has discovered that it is a good bill and was originated by a Republican. For that reason it is exceptionally nonpartisan.

Oh, what a splendid thing it would be if, with regard to the numerous commissions that have been created under this administration, many of them on the pretense, which I hope has been justified, that they were necessary for the purposes of the war—what a splendid thing it would be if we could say of all of these commissions so created what we can truthfully say about this harmless little commission—that their term of office is to expire in one year, and that there is absolutely nothing political in them; no offices to be given out, no personal or political advantages, no great force of clerks and officeholders to be supported——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to my economist friend from Indiana.

Mr. COX. I want to warn the gentleman not to prejudge this case, for I am very much afraid——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is the first time I ever knew the gentleman to be in that state of mind.

Mr. COX (continuing). That before the commission expires by limitation of law there will be some way found, some bill brought in here, at least, to pay the expenses of the commission, and perhaps go one step further and put them on a salary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am obliged to the gentleman for his suggestion and hold up to the Members of the House the pleasing assurance that when that occasion arises there will stand with the Appropriation Committee, like a veritable watchdog of the Treasury, the gentleman from Indiana. [Laughter.]

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. BOOHER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10852) to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads, and had instructed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it be passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FOSTER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] may be excused for the remainder of the week, on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will move to adjourn after I make this statement: The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has several bills on the calendar and it will take at least two full days. Perhaps some of them will be passed quickly, but if we start in with the consideration now we would be deprived of two hours and a half. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 9, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 9, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God our Father, we lift up our eyes unto the hills from whence cometh our help. Our help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth. Our highest interest is found only in Thee. Our only hope is in Thee. Our strength is in Thee, for without Thee we can do nothing. Thou art our life, our element, our surety. All the vital concerns of our lives are linked up with Thee and with the great atonement Thou hast provided for our fallen race.

O God, help us to get a stronger hold upon Thy power. Give us clear conceptions of Thy will. Give us the sweet assurances of Thy favor. In all our thoughts and plans may Christ have the preeminence. In all our ways may we acknowledge Him who has promised to direct our paths. May we be careful of our words and of our conduct; and may we never get away from the thought, "Thou God seest me." We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PROHIBITION IN HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Honolulu asking for complete prohibition in the Hawaiian Islands. I ask that the resolutions may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States by Executive order has closed the saloons of the island of Oahu and put further restrictions on the use of liquor, for the good of the military and naval forces of the United States and the people of the island during the war: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, citizens of Honolulu and members of the military and naval forces of the United States, assembled in an "Oahu dry good-citizenship rally" on the eve of the closing of the saloons, hereby express our appreciation of the action of President Wilson; and be it further

Resolved, That since these restrictive measures fall far short of meeting the urgent need of the islands for immediate and complete prohibition, when it is imperative for our people to discontinue any custom that impairs our industrial and military efficiency, that we congratulate our Delegate in Congress, Hon. JONAH KALANIANAOLE, for the prohibition bill he has caused to be introduced in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and urge him to use every endeavor to bring the bill to speedy passage and complete enforcement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, let me say that the proclamation of the President establishing partial prohibition in the island of Oahu has created a condition requiring immediate attention and remedy on the part of Congress. The proclamation prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors on the island of Oahu, but did not prohibit their manufacture or their importation. The result is that they are being manufactured to a large extent in Oahu, and are being unloaded on the people of the adjoining islands. Much of this liquor is then imported back into the main island, the island of Oahu, thereby largely neutralizing the intended effect of the proclamation. The inhabitants of the other islands are protesting against this situation, and I intend at the first opportunity to call up the bill for complete prohibition during the war for these islands.

UNITED STATES BOY SCOUTS.

Mr. SMOOT. Several days ago I had printed in the RECORD a letter from Messrs. Hughes, Rounds, Schurman & Dwight, referring to the United States Boy Scouts. I am in receipt of a letter from John D. Gluck in answer to the same, with the request that I have it printed in the RECORD, which I now ask to have done.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, May 6, 1918.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Please refer to letter of Messrs. Hughes, Rounds, Schurman & Dwight (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 26, 1918, p. 5642), regarding United States Boy Scouts. This letter, I am informed, was sent to you by an apprentice in the employ of the law firm above mentioned, and was done so without Mr. Hughes's knowledge of the true facts in the case.

I deny that I am a professional charity solicitor and earn a living in such a manner. I refer to my 15 years' record in the work for the rehabilitation of our merchant marine. I am the first man in America to bring to light and stop dangerous German maritime propaganda.

I deny that I have ever traded upon the name of the Boy Scouts of America. I deny that I am one of two men who got control of a paper organization. I emphatically deny that I ever used the names of prominent men at any time or place for the purpose of leading people to believe they were supporting the Boy Scouts of America.

The statement that I interfered with the success of the third liberty loan is asinine in that I am the originator of the Boy Scout liberty-loan drive.

I stand for the Boy Scouts of America first, last, and all the time, and applaud the excellent work of the boys, all of the scout leaders, and the prominent citizens connected with the movement. I am sincerely sorry for the Military Boy Scouts, a hitherto mismanaged but legitimate institution founded in 1909 (United States Boy Scouts), whose boys do their country honor and who during peace times had a "hard row to hoe." It was on this account that I suggested that Members of Congress send these loyal and patriotic boys a note of good cheer before they "go over the top." I know that the boys felt deeply chagrined because they had apparently been discriminated against. Many patriotic and fearless Congressmen gladly responded. A few sent glowing tributes and then asked to have them returned upon reading the letter from Messrs. Hughes, Rounds, Schurman & Dwight.

I believe that this is a time when the man power of our Nation should be united and this silly, unimportant Boy Scout feud laid aside.

My defensive activities are directed against an individual who manages to get himself indorsed by prominent men or their agents, none of whom, I believe, know the true facts of the case, which are made to appear very serious by the practice of vicious intrigue. The defense of the Military Boy Scouts is a very small part of my complaint in this unpatriotic dollar-and-cents fight; it is the individual, or individuals, that have through what I believe to be Hun influence interfered for the past six years with the program of elementary military training among boys throughout the United States. That is what started me fighting, and if it keeps up we will witness the disgraceful spectacle of a nation-wide demonstration by organizations representing over a million boys who insist on military training. In short, the point I wish to make is the fact that the United States Boy Scouts are not alone the ones that have suffered, but on account of the similarity of title have been made the target of this vicious and hitherto victorious intrigue.

The Military Boy Scouts changed their name five years ago to suit the convenience of the promoters of the Boy Scouts of America, and recently endeavored again to do so on two occasions, eliminating the word "Scout." On one occasion, the proposed new name being a good one, it was snatched up by an associate of one of the promoters, and on another occasion influence was brought to bear to prevent another name and accepted charter from being filed. Perhaps this secret campaign against the United States Military Boy Scouts is being pressed, because whole troops of Boy Scouts of America have applied for membership in the United States Boy Scouts, which latter organization is now undergoing a thorough overhauling.

I believe the Boy Scout movement as practiced by the Boy Scouts of America to-day will soon resolve itself into being an association for children and that the Boy Scouts of America should have the exclusive right to the name "Boy Scouts."

In conclusion, I beg to advise that I have never profited one dollar by my connection with the Military Scouts, and that my connection therewith has been honorary and not official; that the Seventh Regiment, United States Boy Scouts, is a legitimate scout regiment, with offices in the Candler Building, New York; and, furthermore, on Wednesday of this week I will meet for the first time the staff officers of the department of the East, United States Boy Scouts.

Respectfully,

JOHN D. GLUCK.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 4515) providing for the admission of disabled officers, soldiers, and sailors to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4516) granting an increase of pension to Otto A. Risum; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 4517) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4518) granting a pension to Cantorinia F. Crawford (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 4519) granting an increase of pension to John J. Cassin; and

A bill (S. 4520) granting a pension to Mary E. Cook; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 4521) to provide an additional method for enforcing and foreclosing tax sales and tax deeds in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

KNIGHTS OF MODERN SYRIA.

Mr. McCUMBER. I introduce a bill, by request, which seeks to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of Knights of Modern Syria and coalesce into a single society a great number of the Syrian societies. I feel that I ought to say something about it at the time of introducing the bill, because there are reasons why I might be compelled at some time to vote against any kind of a bill that recognizes a hyphenated American society in it.

Mr. President, while I shall support this particular bill so long as we permit these societies in the United States, I believe that, on the whole, the hyphenating of our American citizenship by societies which seek to perpetuate the foreign lineage of their membership has done more than any other one thing I can think of to prevent a complete assimilation of all of our people into one great American people.

For years we have pandered to the different hyphenates in this country in a political way. We have formed our tickets to meet the requirements of German-Americans, Irish-Americans, Norwegian-Americans, Swedish-Americans, Polish-Americans, and many others, excepting only the Scotch-Americans and the American Americans. We have paid very little attention to those two classes of our people. So when the great war broke out in Europe we found that we were a composite Nation rather than a homogeneous people, and that our sympathies were measured always by the relationship between the particular society and the foreign country from which its members had originated.

My own conviction is that the time ought to come, and come soon, when we shall say to the American people, "When you have crossed the ocean and taken your oath of allegiance you are to become wholly and solely an American people." I believe that these hyphenated societies are an injury rather than a blessing to the American people. They naturally tend to destroy the homogenity of our people and inculcate sympathies and prejudices that are against our real interest.

But there is in this particular bill which I call attention to some very timely and laudable purposes:

First. To better the conditions of all Syrians everywhere, and especially in Syria, and to furnish help and food to the starving people of that country.

Second. To devise and carry out a plan of education which will make the members good citizens of the United States and to give them instruction in civil government and the English language.

Third. To give organized aid to the United States in the prosecution of the present war and to arouse patriotism among its members.

Those particular features are certainly commendable, and as long as there are to be hyphenated societies in the United States, of course I would naturally vote and support one for this purpose, but, I repeat, I hope the time will come soon when we can get the everlasting hyphens out of our American citizenship and become one people, with one heart and one soul, that will determine its stand by the righteousness or the unrighteousness of any cause rather than by the lineage that may exist between the individual member and any other nation engaged in that cause.

The bill (S. 4514) incorporating the Supreme Lodge of Knights of Modern Syria was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUNISHMENT FOR DISLOYALTY.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on the 15th of April the Attorney General addressed a communication to the executive committee of the American Bar Association asking the aid of the members of that association in the enforcement of the laws and in prosecutions under the laws intended to punish crimes of disloyalty and other similar offenses, and reviewing therein some of the difficulties that had been encountered in dealing with that problem. I deem it of such importance as that it ought to go before the country, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

[Suggestions of Attorney General Gregory to executive committee in relation to the Department of Justice, at Richmond, Va., Apr. 16, 1918.]

Gentlemen of the Executive Committee of the American Bar Association, You have asked me to meet with you this morning and suggest in what way the body you represent can help the Government, and especially the Department of Justice, in the present emergency. With no preliminaries, I will proceed.

We must set our faces against lawlessness within our own borders. Whatever we may say about the causes for our entering this war, we know that one of the principal reasons was the lawlessness of the German nation—what they have done in Belgium and in northern France, and what we have reason to know they would do elsewhere. For us to tolerate lynching is to do the same thing that we are condemning in the Germans. Lynch law is the most cowardly of crimes. Invariably the victim is unarmed, while the men who lynch are armed and large in numbers. It is a deplorable thing under any circumstances, but at this time, above all others, it creates an extremely dangerous condition. I invite your help in meeting it. From all the facts I have been able to gather concerning the lynching of the man in Illinois, I doubt his having been guilty of any offense. Such happenings grow out of a condition of mind where people say, "The Government is giving us no protection; spies are blowing up our factories; they are giving information to Germany; our boys are being shot in the rear; and our duly constituted authorities are doing nothing to protect us, and we will take the law into our own hands." This appeals to the excited and drunken mind. Unless stopped, it is going to result in a condition most deplorable.

The two excuses usually given are that there are no adequate laws, and that the laws we have are not properly enforced.

The people of this country must be given to understand that we have means of protecting those in the field and those at home and what is being done to accomplish that result.

I care little for criticisms of the Department of Justice, but when the people are being deceived and the most ignorant of them incited by absolutely false reports I feel that something must be done to meet the situation.

First, as to the laws: It is hardly necessary to say that when war broke out we had no real, substantial set of laws with which to confront the emergency. The department therefore attempted to procure additional legislation. We secured the passage of the espionage act, but most of the teeth which we tried to put in were taken out. We got what we could, but Congress itself did not realize at that time the conditions that would confront us.

To give you an idea of the ineffectiveness of that law when applied by a judge not in accord with its purposes, I refer to a celebrated case recently decided by a district judge of the United States, which will give you an idea of how impossible it is to enforce it in some jurisdictions.

The defendant was charged with having violated section 3 of the espionage act in that (1) he did "make and convey false reports and false statements with intent to interfere with the operation and success of the military and naval forces of the United States and to promote the success of its enemies"; and (2) that he did "cause and attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States, and obstruct the recruiting and enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service of the United States, specifically as follows: At divers times, in the presence of sundry persons, defendant declared that he would flee to avoid going to the war; that Germany would whip the United States, and he hoped so; that the President was a Wall Street tool, using the United States forces in the war because he was a British tool; that the President was the crookedest —— (the term used was too vile to repeat) ever President; that he was the richest man in the United States; that the President brought us into the war by British dictation; that Germany had right to sink ships and kill Americans without warning; and that the United States was only fighting for Wall Street millionaires and to protect Morgan's interests in England."

The court stated that the evidence would justify a finding that defendant did make the declarations charged, but that a verdict of guilty of any of the crimes charged could not be sustained, and instructed the jury to acquit. Probably from 20 to 30 other district judges have construed that law and properly left to the jury the duty of determining the intention of the accused from the language used and the circumstances under which it was used. It seems practically impossible in the district in which that judge presides to punish the disloyalty denounced by this statute.

Congress is now considering, and I feel quite sure will shortly pass, an amendment to the espionage act which will make it much more drastic, and which it is hoped will form the basis for convictions in all Federal districts.

Consider what is generally known as the sabotage law, now pending before Congress. The ordinary man does not understand that there is no United States law against arson or even murder except within certain restricted territory, that the laws passed by Congress are very limited in their scope, and that the State legislatures possess the broader powers to punish crime.

The limited law-enforcing power of the Federal Government may be illustrated by the case of the famous German spy Von Rintelen.

This man, before we were involved in the war, entered into a conspiracy with a German chemist named Scheele and others to sink vessels on the high seas with incendiary bombs. The bombs were being manufactured on the interned German vessel Vaterland at Hoboken.

Hanging would have been too good for that crime, because women and children with no protection were on those vessels. The only way of reaching this man under Federal law was to charge him with violating the laws of the United States regulating the transportation of dangerous materials in foreign commerce, for which offense the maximum penalty is 18 months in jail and a fine of $2,000. This punishment was inflicted, but was utterly inadequate.

At that time we had no Federal law under which a person could be punished for blowing up a powder magazine. What is known as the "sabotage act" is now under consideration, providing proper punishment for the destruction or injury of supplies, material, structures, etc., intended or suitable for the use of the Government. (Note: This bill has since become law.)

The most effective machinery so far provided for dealing with alien enemies is furnished by the old act of 1798, giving the President power to intern alien enemies when their being at liberty would probably constitute a menace to the public safety. Even this applies only to males over 14 years of age. In many instances women are the most dangerous of our alien enemies, and Congress is now considering an amendment to this act which will bring them within its terms. (Note: This bill has since become law.)

What is known as the "passport law," which will properly control the incoming and outgoing of every person in the United States, is now before Congress. This is badly needed, especially on the Mexican border, where the evil of unrestricted passage is assuming serious proportions.

Generally speaking, these are the more important measures now under consideration, and I earnestly hope they will be passed at an early day. With their help we shall be fairly able to adequately meet the conditions which have arisen.

The other excuse given by people who engage in lynching is that the laws are not enforced.

In order that you may act upon the suggestions I intend to make you should know something of the situation.

As lawyers, you have a fair appreciation of the burden which rests upon the Department of Justice. I should say that its work has largely more than doubled since the outbreak of war. There are certain new fields we must now enter and have entered. We had no previous experience in enforcing laws against espionage, treason, and kindred crimes.

There are in the United States some 1,500,000 male alien enemies over 14 years of age. Assuming that each stands for a family of three—a wife and one child—that would make 4,500 000 alien enemies within our borders. This will give you an idea of the size of the problem.

The intelligence bureaus of the Army and Navy, the Secret Service and Customs Division of the Treasury, the investigators of the Post Office Department, the Intelligence Division of the Bureau of Labor, and the small force employed by the Department of State perform many important duties, and excellent cooperation has been secured between these different branches of the Government intelligence system and the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice.

The Attorney General is charged by order of the President with the enforcement of the proclamations and regulations governing alien enemies. The department is likewise charged with the prosecution of practically all crimes against the United States, and there is involved in this the necessity for the investigation of the facts on which prosecutions are based. It can be safely said that the Department of Justice makes from 75 to 80 per cent of all the investigations which the Government finds necessary.

We have to-day in this service, or cooperating by definite agreement with the Government, 1,000 men for every 1 man so engaged when war was declared last April. Our official force has been enormously increased. It is supplemented by the police forces of the States, counties, cities, and towns, and by powerful patriotic organizations like the American Protective League, which has over 200,000 members and is operating in over 1,000 communities. These volunteer organizations exercise no governmental powers, but their assistance enables us among other things to investigate hundreds of thousands of complaints and to keep scores of thousands of persons under observation. We have representatives at all meetings of any importance. We use large numbers of men, and some women, who understand and speak the German language. Gatherings of Germans are given special attention.

The preventive measures are of first importance. These are being taken and largely account for the fact that during the first year of the war there has not been in the United States what anyone could properly characterize as an outbreak against the authority of the Government. One thing a German intensely dislikes—and we do not differ from him in that respect—he does not like to be hung. He fears the powerful arm of the Government. The Germans know what is going on, and it is having its effect.

Before the United States became involved in the war we had an experience of two or three years attempting to maintain conditions of neutrality. In that time we obtained a fair idea of the dangerous people in this country, and within a few hours after war was declared the most dangerous Germans were seized and interned. They were apprehended from San Francisco to New York and from the Canadian border to Florida. We then immediately began the system of observation of every man and woman suspected of being dangerous; their associates, language, and actions were noted and reported; as soon as these justified internment the Government acted, and more than ten times the original number have now been confined.

The story that the country is flooded with German spies is a gross exaggeration. There is comparatively little spying done, and the main reason for this is that the men who would be dangerous spies in this country are mostly in detention camps. They have quietly disappeared from their usual haunts and are where they can do no harm. If we were simply intent on banging German spies, the first thing would be to turn these interned persons loose and acts warranting hanging would probably very promptly occur.

I do not believe there is to-day any country which is being more capably policed than is the United States.

Intemperate talking and writing by ill-informed persons affect many weak-minded people. You can never quite overtake a false statement when once it has been uttered and widely published. Many of the authors of such statements are doubtless sincere, believe the wild stories they hear, and disseminate them with no intention of inducing lynching and like lawlessness, but nevertheless such persons are largely responsible for results of this character.

Some weeks ago a high official in what is generally considered a patriotic organization published a statement, which appeared in the New York papers and throughout the country, to the effect that since the declaration of war arms and munitions had been shipped from this country to Germany and that 14 spies had been shot by the United States Government. This person was subpœnaed before a grand jury in order that he might, under oath, verify his statements. It then developed that the statements were without the slightest foundation, and yet to this day thousands and perhaps hundreds of thousands of people in this country believe them.

Recently the statement was generally printed that in a certain Government factory in New York City where gas masks are being produced for our men in France more than 100 employees had been discharged because they had intentionally made the masks defective. A thorough investigation showed that this report was entirely untrue, and that while from 3 to 7 per cent of the masks were defective and were rejected there was not the slightest evidence going to show that this arose from any cause other than those naturally incident to the work. If the facts had been as reported, I would have promptly had the guilty parties indicted for treason and would have done so with a fair hope of securing convictions even under the handicaps imposed upon the Government in a prosecution of that character.

The statement has been made hundreds of times that the Government has been paroling German spies against whom cases had been made out. There was no foundation whatever for such a report. Even of the hundreds interned because it was believed they were dangerous only six have ever been paroled. In one case the man was released for two weeks and kept under observation in order that he might be at the bedside of his wife under trying and painful circumstances, and at the end of that time he was reinterned. Another was the case of a man who was undoubtedly a dangerous alien enemy. The department had reason to believe, however, that there were men higher up who were involved with him, and so he was paroled for 30 days and kept under constant observation, with the hope that his still more dangerous associates might thereby be discovered. At the end of 30 days he was reinterned. The other four were cases of little importance, and after careful consideration it was determined that it was not necessary to intern them longer.

False statements are seldom pure fabrications. They are generally built around some scintilla of truth. This one concerning the paroling of spies grew out of a misunderstanding of the President's proclamations authorizing the interning of alien enemies. Interned persons are not accused of crime, but are men who would probably commit criminal acts if at large. This is the process: The first thing we do is to detain a man if he is suspected. His pedigree, associates, activities, etc., are investigated. If the result is favorable and the man is not found dangerous, he is discharged. If it is concluded that he is dangerous, he is interned. When we detain a man the idea frequently gets out that he is a German spy and the people do not understand his being released.

It has been repeatedly stated that more than $50,000,000 worth of Government munitions and supplies have been burned by German sympathizers during the last year. A few days ago the representatives of the Underwriters' Fire Insurance Association declared that it had not been clearly established that during the year there had occurred a single incendiary fire of the character referred to. Although it has investigated a number of fires in munition factories and Government plants, the Department of Justice has not been satisfied that a single one of them was of incendiary origin. I have had the figures in dollars and cents compiled so as to compare losses by fire during the year 1913 (this being the year before the European war broke out) with those of the year 1917. Taking into consideration the fact that the articles burned in 1917 were worth from 40 to 100 per cent more than like articles were worth in 1913, there has been, in fact, a substantial decrease in losses by fire. In a number of instances it has been conclusively shown that such fires resulted from accident or carelessness.

Notwithstanding the repeated charges that bread was being poisoned and filled with glass, it has not been demonstrated that this had been intentionally done in any case except one. In that instance a German was notified of his discharge by his employer and deliberately put glass in a loaf of bread. It was done with the purpose of having it discovered; it was discovered, and the employer's business was ruined, although that one loaf of bread was probably the only one with glass in it that had ever gone out of his shop. Of course, impurities of various kinds, especially pieces of flint and stone, and occasionally even pieces of glass, are found in bread, their presence being due to carelessness or accident.

Repeatedly it has been stated that German sympathizers were poisoning United States soldiers in the training camps, but no real evidence of this has ever been produced.

Hundreds of papers have published stories about mules and horses of the United States Army being poisoned at drinking troughs. Every case reported has been run down with the utmost care, and in only one instance—in West Virginia—was poisoned water found. Not an Army horse or mule had ever taken a drink at the trough where it was found, nor was it ever contemplated that they should do so. The matter is still under investigation, but the indications are that the water was poisoned by the washing of a bottle or in some other accidental way.

Not infrequently as many as fifteen hundred complaints reach the Department of Justice in a single day. It is safe to say that there is nothing whatever in 95 per cent of these cases, and yet all are thoroughly investigated in order that we may cull out the small number which justify prosecution.

I do not wish to create the impression that there is no danger from German spies and German sympathizers. There are thousands of persons in this country who would injure the United States in this war if they could do so with safety to themselves. However, they are no more anxious to be hung than you are. We are taking nothing for granted, and we are using every possible preventive measure. We are trying to put the fear of God in the hearts of these people, and we have put it there, and it is going to remain there.

The demand is constantly being made that we shoot German spies before breakfast. The Department of Justice is not going to shoot any before breakfast or at any other time, as there is no law under which we can do it. We are going to urge capital punishment in any case where the facts justify it, and I do not anticipate any serious trouble in securing the active assistance of juries and courts whenever such cases are developed.

You may be interested in knowing that I can not recall an instance in which the retailers of the wild stories above referred to and the bitter critics of the enforcement of the law have been able to add a single important fact to those already in the possession of the department.

I urge you gentlemen, through such machinery as you see fit to adopt, to assist in getting before the people of this country the facts that laws are now upon the statute books, or will be within the next few weeks, which will reasonably protect the interior defenses of our country; that an honest, adequate, and earnest force is dealing with this situation, and that unless the hysteria which results in the lynching of men is checked it will create a condition of lawlessness from which we will suffer for a hundred years.

There is another potent reason for sternly repressing these disorders. The cry of the mob is that it is protecting the boys at the front. The reverse is true. No greater wrong can be done to our soldiers in France than that of lynching Germans in America. The story of the death of that German in Illinois is being considered in Germany to-day. Such acts will be seized upon by our enemies as justifying severe reprisals on our soldiers in German prison camps. Having sowed the wind, we will reap the whirlwind.

In the second place, your association can perform a service of almost equal importance by throwing the great weight of your influence against the passage of unconstitutional laws. As long as I am Attorney General of the United States, I shall give the Government the benefit of all reasonable and proper doubts when it comes to the question of the power to be exercised in a time like this, but where there is no really serious doubt as to the unconstitutionality of a measure the duty of all good citizens is plain. There is a feeling that in some way a condition of war suspends the guaranties of the Constitution and justifies the doing of illegal and even criminal acts. I see no room for a substantial distinction between the lawless German autocrat who shoots noncombatants in Belgium and the lawless American democrat who hangs unarmed civilians in America.

From every section of the country comes up the cry that the disloyal and seditious should be tried by military courts-martial and promptly shot. It is hardly conceivable how lawyers acquainted with the three great guaranties of our Constitution and the decisions of our courts can contend that civilians should be so tried at a time when our civil courts are performing their proper functions, and when our country is not being subjected to invasion or rebellion.

In the third place, the Government needs the moral and active support of this great organization in the enforcement of Federal laws. Just before the registration under the draft act, the Illinois Bar Association passed a resolution substantially to the effect that it would not only be an unpatriotic thing for a lawyer to represent a man who was seeking to escape the draft, but that it would be an unprofessional act. Some might be found who would differ with the view so announced. As far as I am concerned, speaking not as a lawyer but as an American citizen, I wish to express my admiration of the action taken. Presumably the draft act will be properly and justly administered, but where the question of military service arises our country is entitled to consideration as against the individual.

Members of your association belong to a select class, who can render a service not obtainable from any other part of our citizenship. One of the finest exhibitions of patriotism this country has known was the quiet offer of the lawyers of the land to act as advisers of all citizens who wished help in construing the somewhat intricate terms of the questionnaires recently issued by the War Department. This work was done by thousands of lawyers.

In this connection I wish to make one further tangible suggestion. We need now, and are going to need quite badly in the future, in a number of sections of the country, a few skilled criminal lawyers of the highest type, men who are great trial lawyers. Especially in the trial of cases of treason and crimes of like gravity, the Government is entitled to the help of the very best men that can be secured from the bar of the Nation. I hope you can organize a movement which will result in having two or three of the greatest criminal lawyers in every judicial district of the United States file with the district attorneys of their respective districts an expression of their willingness to serve the Government in any criminal case in which they are drafted. I sincerely trust that this will be done at an early day in places like Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, New York, Seattle, San Francisco, and St. Louis. There are many other points of importance, but just at the moment I recall the above as being places where such service is likely to be required in the not distant future. The men of the class I refer to are all beyond the draft age. They can in the way indicated perform a great patriotic service. I have never found the lawyers of this country slackers when a legitimate call of their country was heard and understood. It is true that not all can make the financial sacrifice involved, but most of them can do so, and many of them will do so if given the opportunity.

In the fourth place, I urge this association to thoroughly organize its forces in support of the passage of adequate State laws. Some of the States have passed wonderfully strong laws, but some of them have done nothing whatever. In many sections there is a feeling that this is a national war and that the United States should take entire charge of its prosecution, including the enforcement of penalties for crimes related to the war. As lawyers, you understand how much greater latitude is given to the State legislatures than to Congress in reaching many critical situations. Drastic enforcement of laws against idlers, etc., would be of great benefit in many sections. We need a movement in every State in the Union to supplement with proper laws the more general laws passed by Congress. We are entitled to and expect the hearty cooperation of the legislative and executive departments of the different States, and your earnest help in procuring this is asked for.

The greatest danger to this country is not the German spy or sympathizer who would be glad to convey information or blow up munitions and supplies. The greatest menace is the so-called "respectable pacifist." I can respect a woman who has brought a child into the world and opposes his going forth to battle, but I can not characterize the male pacifist, who believes there is nothing worth fighting for, as other than a physical or moral degenerate. By the exercise of his baleful influence he is committing the unpardonable crime of stabbing in the back the lads who are fighting at the front for his liberty as well as their own. There is no room for the pacifist in this country. There is no room for neutrality in this country. War has been declared for good and sufficient reasons, and by the war-making power, and this association should in every way set its face against the pacifist and his propaganda.

To sum my suggestions up, they are that the American Bar Association shall bring all of its power and influence to bear upon securing the following results:

(1) The discouragement and suppression of lynch law in every form.
(2) The prevention of the passage of clearly unconstitutional laws.
(3) The enforcement of the Federal statutes.
(4) The passage of supplemental laws by State legislatures and their enforcement by State executives.
(5) The protection of the Nation against the insidious propaganda of the pacifist.

MOTHERS' DAY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 40) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That with the approach of Mothers' Day the attention of the Nation be directed to the patriotic sacrifice made by the mothers of our land in freely offering their sons to bear arms, and, if need be, die in the defense of liberty and justice. That, in appreciation of this great sacrifice, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to recommend in the observance of Sunday, May 12, 1918, as Mothers' Day, that the people of the United States offer fervent prayers to Almighty God for His divine blessing on the mothers of our country, especially those having sons serving under our flag throughout the world.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House just laid before the Senate.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10852. An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

DEPARTURE FROM AND ENTRY INTO THE UNITED STATES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10264) to prevent in time of war departure from or entry into the United States contrary to the public safety.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the subject of aviation is now occupying a very prominent place in the public mind and very properly commanding the attention of the people. I therefore notified the Senate yesterday morning that I would speak very briefly concerning one feature of the commercial side of aviation production of which the people have not been advised. It is a very important feature and should be familiar to all who are interested in ascertaining the causes underlying the existing aircraft situation. It is known as the cross-license agreement, which the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association is authorized to execute with producers of planes and parts of planes.

I am disposed to think from the incomplete examination which I have been able to make of these cross-license agreements that it has played and will play a very important part in the production of aircraft. Hence a proper understanding of the present unsatisfactory situation in aircraft production may, perhaps, be in part explained by these agreements which have the sanction both of the aviation authorities and of the Attorney General in so far as the opinion of that official is concerned.

Mr. President, we began to pay serious attention to aviation in the summer of 1916 when conditions between the United States and Mexico became so acute as to justify the Pershing expedition across the boundaries of that Republic. That incident, as time developed, became of comparative unimportance; but it did bring to our attention very vividly the supremely important part which aircraft plays in modern warfare. Therefore appropriations of, I think, about $13,000,000 were provided for aircraft construction in the military bill of 1916. In the act of March 4, 1917, this added provision appears:

To enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to secure by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise such basic patent or patents as they may consider necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States and its dependencies for governmental and civil purposes under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $1,000,000.

The purpose of this appropriation is obvious; the control of basic patents by the Government being then regarded, and I am sorry that it is not now regarded, as essential to successful Government aircraft production.

Very shortly after the adjournment of Congress in 1917 war was declared against Germany, and the military and naval activities of the Government at once demanded and received our constant attention. An advisory committee on aeronautics was created, of which Mr. William F. Durand was made chairman and Mr. S. W. Stratton secretary. That committee has since been commendably active in its efforts to aid in formulating and promoting aircraft production for our war needs.

Among its activities was the question of patent control. For reasons satisfactory to the board and which may, perhaps, be satisfactory to the Nation, it was determined not to purchase or commandeer existing patents regarding aviation, but to make some arrangement of a more satisfactory character regarding them. My own view, Mr. President—and it is fortified by our recent experiences—is that the committee erred in not securing by purchase or by condemning, through powers which Congress would freely have given them, existing patents of an established and fundamental character, because, with their control, agreement for aircraft production based upon basic or original patents, would not be in any wise embarrassed by the personal or selfish interests of outsiders or by conflicts between rival claimants of the inventions. But, however that may be, the fact is that the purchase of patents, and therefore the use of the appropriation for that purpose, was almost immediately abandoned by the committee.

My attention was called some time during the month of February last to the method of procedure receiving the approval of the Advisory Association, and which materialized in the form of a so-called cross-license agreement, under which producers of aircraft, exclusive of motor engines, are, generally speaking, required to operate. I at once applied for and promptly received a copy of that agreement, together with a copy of the proceedings of the committee which preceded and accompanied the formation of the contracts to which I refer. I shall not read the minutes, Mr. President, which comprise 25 pages of typewritten matter, but I shall ask at the end of my remarks to insert those proceedings in the RECORD. It is sufficient for the present purpose to say that the attorneys and representatives of those interested in what are called basic patents, and the representatives of the Aviation Section, after consultation with the Advisory Board, determined upon the preparation of an agreement which would recognize certain basic patents and provide for the issuance by some central authority of licenses to all persons desiring to engage in the manufacture of aircraft upon conditions requiring such manufacturers, among other things, to transfer to the association in whose name the licenses were issued all patents and inventions of their own or which they could control, either basic or otherwise, to the end that each member of the association under the license agreement might have the benefit of these other inventions and developments in their own operations.

At that time, if I am correctly informed, the patents controlled by the Curtiss Co. and the Wright-Martin Co. were either contesting the question of prior invention or were contested by others. Whether the controversies were decided or were in the courts I can not now say; but I think it is understood that no such thing as a recognized patent belonging to any company or individual, and free from challenge as to originality, then existed. The attorney at that time for the Wright-Martin Co., as well as its president, was Mr. Frederick P. Fish, while the attorney for the Curtiss Co. was, and I presume is, a Mr. Crisp.

It was finally determined, Mr. President, to embody the propositions made and accepted at these meetings in the form of what is called a cross-license agreement. That agreement was prepared by one of the attorneys whose names I have mentioned, and in collaboration with others, including the other attorney. Those gentlemen were doubtless as competent, and perhaps more competent than any, to prepare such an agreement; but, so far as one can judge from its recitals, each of them took very good care of his own client, so that the patents controlled by the companies they represented are made basic, fundamental, free from controversy, and, so far as the purposes of the agreement are concerned, established beyond peradventure.

Mr. KING. That is, as between the two parties?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and as to all future cross licenses. Just prior to the date of the agreement a corporation—and doubtless in anticipation of it—was organized in the State of New York, called the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association (Inc.). The date of the charter is the 18th of July, 1917, and the location of the company is Manhattan. The incorporators are Joseph S. Ames, W. Benton Crisp, Albert H. Flint, George H. Houston, and John P. Tarbox, of Buffalo, N. Y., all of these gentlemen, I understand, being interested in aviation companies and enterprises, either professionally or as officers and shareholders.

Shortly after the organization of that company, and on the 24th day of July, 1917, the cross-license agreement the details of which had been arranged in previous conferences with the advisory committee, was formally drawn and executed. It is an agreement comprising 12 printed pages, and I shall not weary the Senate by reading it into the RECORD. I shall ask, however, at the close of my remarks to insert it in the RECORD, so that its contents may be generally and fully known.

In connection with the cross-license agreement there was also adopted a form of license to be issued to those desiring or who might be compelled to associate themselves with the association. This license provides, among other things, that the cross-license agreement shall constitute a part and portion thereof. Thus the cross-license agreement is practically embodied by proper recitals into the license itself.

The shares of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association (Inc.) I understand to be limited to a definite number, and I think that number is 1,000. One share must accompany each license, and the par value of the shares is also $1,000. A thousand incorporators under some circumstances might be considered quite numerous; in aircraft production in times of war the number is comparatively limited; but that limitation, while it does not appear in the cross-license agreement, I am told actually exists. This inevitably tends to monopoly.

Now, to convey an idea as to the probable operation—I will not say "designed operation" of this agreement lest I might reflect unduly upon the advisory board, whose intentions and purposes, I am sure, were above reproach; but as to the operation of the agreement in practice, its consequences may be inferred from a few extracts which I will read from it. Before doing that perhaps I should refer to the so-called license itself, which precedes and embraces the general agreement. Omitting the preambles, which refer to the licensor and certain other stockholders of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association "herein called the subscribers," it is provided—

That for and in consideration of the premises and other good and valuable considerations * * * the licensor does hereby give and grant unto the said licensee the unrestricted but nonexclusive license to make, use, and sell airplanes under all airplane patents of the United States now or hereafter owned or controlled by it, or by any firm, corporation, or association owned or controlled by it, * * * except that no rights, express or implied, are hereby granted under any foreign patents, nor shall the licenses herein provided for apply to or include the use of said patents in their application to other than airplanes.

Then follows this exception:

That no licenses are hereby granted under the Dunne patents, No. 975,403, issued November 15, 1910, and No. 1,003,721, issued September 19, 1911, the rights under which are held by the Burgess Co.

The Burgess Co. and the Curtiss Co., I think, have consolidated. These patents may possibly refer to watercraft, motor boats, and so forth, and I think one of the patents does; but the exception, nevertheless, is in favor of one of the concerns, the basic character of whose patents is fixed by this agreement, so far as it can do so, and which, as I have said, was drawn by the attorneys for the company receiving the benefit of its operation.

Coming now to the agreement, it will be noted that in the second paragraph there is the same exception. The fourth paragraph provides that—

Each "subscriber" covenants that it has not heretofore entered, and will not hereafter enter, into any contract or arrangement whereby its privileges under United States airplane patents, issued or to be issued, inventions, and rights owned or controlled by it, have been or shall be diminished or surrendered so as to exclude or restrict the operation of this instrument in respect thereto. Each "subscriber" further covenants that it will not grant licenses under any such patents for use in airplanes, with reference to which it is receiving royalties hereunder, to any other person, firm, or corporation on more favorable or lower terms of royalty than those herein provided, or which may become more favorable or lower during the term of such license.

Under the sixth paragraph it is provided that—

If any "subscriber" shall have developed the design or manufacture of any special model of airplane or airplane engine or other device used in an airplane (except the airplanes manufactured by the Burgess Co. under the hereinbefore-mentioned Dunne patents and the Hispanio-Suiza aeronautical engine manufactured by the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation or its subsidiaries) which the United States Government may at any time desire to have manufactured in the factory of any other "subscriber" or in the factory of any manufacturer not a "subscriber" hereto, the said "subscriber" agrees that it will furnish to the other "subscribers" or said other manufacturer such complete specifications, drawings, and other production data as may be required for use in the manufacture of such special model, provided that and upon condition that the "subscriber" or other manufacturer in whose factory the work is placed by the United States Government shall agree with said Government and with the "subscriber" owning said specifications, etc., to pay, and shall pay into the treasury of the "company," 1 per cent upon the contract price paid by the Government for each airplane or airplane engine or other device manufactured for it in accordance with said specifications—

And so forth.

That is to say, every person who shall have developed a design, and who shall contract with the Government for manufacture under that design, shall contribute 1 per cent of the price into the treasury of this company, and of course that 1 per cent will be added to what would otherwise be the contract price with the Government.

I read further:

If the manufacturer of such special model is conducted by one not a "subscriber"—

That is, by some nonlicensee—

Such manufacturer shall also agree to pay into the treasury of the "company" such royalty as a "subscriber" would have been obliged to pay had it made and sold the airplane, engine, or other device, including the amount specified in subdivisions (a) and (b) of Paragraph VIII hereof.

That is to say, if an inventor or designer of some improvement in aircraft shall permit the manufacturer of his patented device by some outsider, then that manufacturer must agree with the subscriber that it will pay not only the royalty to which I have referred but other royalties of very much greater amount provided for in other sections of the agreement.

In the seventh paragraph, the subscriber is required to report all United States airplane patents and inventions, together with serial numbers and filing dates of all pending applications, with all rights under such patents then owned or controlled by it; and it also provides that no omission from the report shall exclude the patent, application, or right so omitted from the operation of this agreement. I shall not read all of this paragraph, for it is very long, but it is a very important one. In fact, it may be the fundamental provision of the contract.

Subdivision (d) of this paragraph provides that—

On the 10th day of January, April, July, and October in each year, each "subscriber" shall report the number of airplanes, airplane engines, or other devices for use in airplanes which it has sold and delivered during the preceding three calendar months, made from specifications, drawings, and other production data obtained from any other "subscriber," as provided in paragraph VI hereof, together with the sales price and the dates of delivery; and there shall be included in the same report a copy of any agreement which the "subscriber" shall have made with another manufacturer as provided in said paragraph.

The Senate will see how the business of the subscriber is bound up with this Manufacturers' Aircraft Association. No matter what contract he may make on the outside, no matter what advantages he can secure, the outsider is required, as one of the conditions under which the contract will be made, to become a member of this association, and to abide by its provisions, and, of course, to pay the royalties which are there required.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Some time ago I received a pamphlet purporting to be put out by the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association. It stated that Howard Coffin was an honorary member, and that a man named Waldron was a member of that aircraft association, and that Curtiss, Wright, and a few other names that I recall, were likewise members of that aircraft association. Did that association attempt to monopolize the production of airplanes in the United States, and to exclude all other persons from manufacturing them for the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. Not in terms; but I believe the agreement is that it necessarily operates in that way and reaches that conclusion. I therefore can not escape the conviction that it was designed for that purpose by the men who prepared it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator state how Mr. Coffin, occupying the position which he did with the Government, could accept a position, either honorary or otherwise, as a member of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association?

Mr. THOMAS. That assumes that he is a member of it. I am not prepared to say that he is. Of course, if the fact be that men engaged in the service of the United States are also subscribers to the shares of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, then the query presented by the Senator from Utah is most pertinent; but I am not prepared to say that his premise is correct. I hope it is not.

The next paragraph, No. VIII, is entitled, "Payments to the 'company.'" That is also divided into subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e).

Subsection (a) provides that on each airplane, with or without engine, the sum of $200 shall be paid to this association until such time as the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation and the Curtiss Co. shall have been paid the aggregate sums provided for in the next paragraph.

Subsection (b) provides that upon each airplane such additional sum, not to exceed $25, as the board of directors of the company may from time to time fix, shall be paid after the above-mentioned aggregate sums shall be paid to the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation and the Curtiss Airplane & Motor Corporation; also, by subdivision (d), such amounts as may be payable with reference to the use of specifications, drawings, and data as provided in paragraph VI hereof, including the royalty payments therein provided for; but all 1 per cent payments on account of the use of such specifications, drawings, and data shall cease when the total paid by all users aggregates $50,000.

This is important, because the specifications, drawings, and data are furnished almost entirely by the Curtiss Co. or the Wright Co.; and I may say, Mr. President, that the multitudinous changes in the plans of the Bristol flier, amounting to over 1,100 in one month, were made by the Curtiss Co. Such amount or amounts as may be payable with reference to the use of specifications, drawings, and data may therefore in the aggregate reach considerable magnitude; and, of course, as I have stated, the royalties and requirements of this contract necessarily come out of the Government, because common business practice justifies the assumption that in the details of the contract with the Government these extra requirements will be figured as part of the overhead charge or fixed charge.

Subdivision (e) requires that each subscriber who shall become a party after the 1st day of July, 1917, shall, on the 10th day of January, April, July, or October next occurring, pay to the company those amounts which it would have been obliged to pay if it had been a subscriber on July 1, 1917. In other words, if the Senator from Utah should be so fortunate—or perhaps I should say so unfortunate—as to devise some aircraft improvement which he could only use through the agency of this cross-license agreement, he would be required not only to pay the prospective royalty provided for in his license, but he would also be required to pay royalties as though he had signed up on the 1st day of July, 1917. That provision has all the features of the old darky's celebrated coon trap, which was said to be so "sot" as to catch the coon "a-comin," and also to catch him "a-gwine."

Now comes "Payments by the company," Subparagraph IX:

Out of the moneys paid into the treasury—

And the Senate will bear in mind that on March 4, 1917, the Congress appropriated a million dollars for the purchase of basic patents, and, of course, would have subsequently appropriated any amount in addition to that which was necessary for fair compensation for the acquisition of these so-called basic patents if that policy had been followed—

Out of the moneys paid into the treasury of the "company" pursuant to the provisions hereof the following payments shall be made by the company on the 20th day of January, April, July, and October in each year, to wit:

(a) To the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation $135 on each airplane, with or without engine, with reference to which payments shall have been made in accordance with subdivisions (a) and (e) of Paragraph VIII hereof, during the preceding three calendar months, until United States Patent No. 821393, issued May 22, 1906, shall have expired, or until the aggregate sum of $2,000,000 shall have been paid to the said Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, when all payments to it hereunder shall cease, except as hereinafter provided.

Subdivision (b) provides that there shall be paid to the Curtiss company $40 on each airplane, with or without engine, with reference to which payments shall have been made in accordance with subdivisions (a) and (e) of Paragraph VIII, which shall continue until such time as the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation shall have been paid in full as provided for in subdivision (a), after which there shall be paid to the Curtiss Airplane & Motor Corporation at the times herein mentioned the sum of $175 on each of said airplanes until the aggregate sum of $2,000,000 shall have been paid to it under its patent.

So that the primary burden placed by this contract upon aircraft production is $4,000,000, $2,000,000 to each of these concerns. I have been informed that quite recently, and since the aircraft situation has become acute, these sums have been reduced to $1,000,000 each; and if that is the case, of course it is a gain to the Government which we should recognize.

Then there are provisions with regard to the disposition of the balance of the money received from royalties, and the imposition of penalties, and so on.

We now come to the result of breach of agreement. I do not know that it is necessary to read these provisions regarding breach of the agreement and withdrawal from the agreement. I may say, however, that it is provided that in the event of breach of agreement the board of arbitration will assess such damages and impose upon the subscriber in default such other requirements as seem to the board to be just, and the subscriber expressly agrees and covenants that it will pay those damages and comply with such agreements.

It is then provided that nothing contained in the paragraph shall deprive the company of the power to make, execute, and deliver licenses under the patents or patent rights owned and controlled by any defaulting subscriber, or to which the subscriber may be entitled, at the time he ceases to be a stockholder. One may default after becoming a licensee; one may commit a breach of the agreement after becoming a licensee; one may therefore be expelled from the company, but his patent, the agreement for patent, and the contracts outstanding remain with the company.

In the event a subscriber desires to withdraw from the agreement he can do so after 10 years from its date, but he must give notice of his election to do so and must also fulfill all of his obligations, but all of the patents and patent rights brought in by the subscriber remain to the association.

In the event of the death of a subscriber, or the dissolution of the corporation, or the bankruptcy of the corporation or the individual who is a subscriber, the company retains the right to purchase, for the benefit of the other subscribers, the stock and the license, and then to sell them on company account at a price to be fixed by arbitration.

There is also a provision for the arbitration of disputes, which is elaborately provided for, and which in this discussion is comparatively unimportant.

Now comes a clause for the further protection of the two concerns whose attorneys prepared the agreement. I read Paragraph XIV:

The "subscribers" hereby waive and release any and all claims which they or any of them may have had against each other for damages and profits on account of any infringement or alleged infringement, prior to July 1, 1917, of any patent included within this instrument in the manufacture, sale, or use of airplanes.

And the fifteenth paragraph provides:

Each "subscriber" agrees that all persons, firms, and corporations now or hereafter controlled by it, and engaged in the manufacture of airplanes, or owning or controlling United States airplane patents, shall be caused to execute this agreement.

Mr. President, were it not for the opinion of the Attorney General I would not hesitate to affirm that this contract is one under which a gigantic monopoly in aircraft production must inevitably ensue. I think I will go further, and say that that was the purpose in mind, so far as the beneficiaries of the agreement are concerned, when the instrument was prepared. But the Attorney General was called upon for an opinion regarding this contract, which he gave on the 6th day of October, 1917, which I shall also ask to have inserted in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

Mr. President, I shall not read this opinion, which is somewhat long; but I am satisfied in my own mind, at least, that but for the emergency, but for the necessity of airplanes, and airplanes as soon as possible, this contract never would have passed the appro ing scrutiny of the Department of Justice. I will read one extract only from the opinion in justification of this statement:

The provision requiring subscribers to submit claims for compensation in respect to patents subsequently acquired by them to a board of arbitrators and to license each other under such patents at the rates of royalty fixed by that board might possibly be used to secure valuable inventions at unreasonable compensation. * * * Its possible abuse * * * scarcely justifies its condemnation in the absence of such abuse.

That seems to damn this contract with very faint praise indeed. If the possible abuse of an agreement like this does not justify its condemnation until the abuse appears, then laws designed to prevent the creation of instrumentalities for preying upon the public unduly would certainly be harmless and wholly ineffective.

I do not at all reflect upon the Department of Justice in making this criticism. It acted conscientiously and sincerely. But I must dissent from its opinion regarding the harmless character of this agreement, and I do not believe the department was aware how and by whom it was prepared.

Mr. President, I affirm that this agreement tends to produce monopoly, first, because it draws within its ownership all patents except improvements upon engines and motive power, all patents existing or to exist affecting the industry. It secures absolute ownership to the extent that when the subscriber withdraws he can not take his patents with him. That being the case, the inventor of a new design can not manufacture himself if those engaged in the particular industry are bound by this cross-license agreement except upon such terms as the association imposes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. That association, in the natural course of things, will secure these patents at its own price, and that price we know will be fixed so low as to discourage the inventive genius of the American citizen. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator to yield to me that I may introduce a resolution and have it referred, a resolution bearing upon the same matter he is now discussing?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I submit the following resolution and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 241), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to inquire into and report to the Senate the progress of aircraft production in the United States, or into any other matters relating to the conduct of the war, by or through the War Department; that said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or during any recess of the Senate; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, documents, and papers; to take the testimony of witnesses under oath, either orally or by deposition; to obtain documents, papers, and other information from the several departments of the Government or any bureau thereof; to employ stenographic help, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such testimony as may be taken; to employ such agents or assistants as may be necessary; and that all expenses, including traveling expenses contracted hereunder, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Oregon a question? Does the resolution in terms warrant the investigation by the committee or the subcommittee of the expenditures which have been made by the Government for the acquisition of aircraft, as to the purchase and development of aircraft?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is my purpose to have it cover all those subjects.

Mr. KING. In my opinion the committee ought to ascertain what has been done with the appropriations heretofore made by Congress and determine definitely the use of the money which has been expended.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It covers all those points.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, while the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the Military Committee, has this subject before the Senate, is it the desire of the Senator to have the resolution now passed?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, of course, it is not the subject now of any discussion. I misunderstood; I thought the Senator was moving for immediate passage. I did not rise to obstruct, but I did rise for information concerning it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. W. H. Fauber, of Brooklyn, is an inventor of a hydroplane, and is evidently well informed upon the general subject of aircraft.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator passes from the subject of the opinion given by the Attorney General, with his permission, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am somewhat at a loss to understand how the Attorney General would give an opinion upon a matter so important and a matter which one would think in the natural course of events would find its way into the courts and receive judicial construction; that is, the contract in controversy would receive a judicial construction. It would seem to me like the Attorney General was deciding a moot case and giving an opinion in advance of the occasion for the giving of an opinion that would bind the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. The opinion was given at the request of the advisory board. I think the practice is not unusual, and it was doubtless upon the strength of the opinion that the board accepted the terms of the contract.

Mr. Fauber has written and distributed a pamphlet entitled "The Men Who Can Win the War, or Things that Should Be Known at the Capitol." This pamphlet is directed to the agreement, which he calls a secret agreement. I presume he does so because he made an application for a copy of it and was refused, so he says. This pamphlet, however, is quite illuminating, and the reasons which he assigns for the annulment of this agreement seem to me to be well supported by its text. Therefore I can, I think, economize time by making his assigned reasons my own and reading them into the RECORD:

The cross-license agreement should be annulled—

First. Because it confers autocratic powers on powerful corporations and has created an organization in the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association (Inc.) whereby corporations can substantially control inventions and patent values and dominate the aircraft industry as an Aircraft Trust.

Second. Because said agreement involves contractual relations and is, in effect, a combination between corporations and the United States Government now operating to control inventions, patent values, and an industry to the advantage of powerful corporations and against the best interests of the people and the efficient prosecution of the war.

Third. Because the terms of said agreement, and also the declarations and acts of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics arbitrarily fix certain unadjudicated patents of questionable value and doubtful utility as fundamental in the aircraft art and without due authority or competent procedure.

Fourth. Because said agreement, as a cross-license instrument, ostensibly providing for the arbitration of patent values, does not make adequate or fair provisions for the purchase of valuable inventions, nor do the corporations controlling said agreement seemingly give any guaranty that the small sum of $25 as additional royalties per machine, which they may, at their pleasure, charge the licensees and collect, they may, at their pleasure, charge the licensees and collect of the Government, shall go to the benefit of inventors of useful inventions or to the purposes for which it is seemingly provided.

Fifth. Because said agreement does and will operate to defeat the purposes and intent of the United States patent laws, and by its provisions indicates an intent to dominate aeroplane inventions and the industry.

Sixth. Because the terms of the said agreement and its operation will be such as to practically immune the Wright and Curtiss Corporations and the members of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association (Inc.) from any responsibility for infringement, in the case of disputed inventions embodied in aircraft built by the members of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association (Inc.) for the United States Government, and since said corporations will be relieved of the penalties of infringement there is little incentive or reason compelling any fair consideration of patents.

Seventh. Because there were no substantial grounds or compelling reasons warranting the action of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics in approving or having any part in creating a cross-license agreement which is vicious in scope and principle and, furthermore, an agreement which is partial to powerful corporations and discriminates against inventors, patent owners, and independent manufacturers of aircraft.

Eighth. Because the subcommittee on patents, having as two of its members the attorneys of the Wright and Curtiss Corporations, viz, Attorneys Crisp and Fish, said subcommittee was not properly constituted for the purpose of dealing fairly with the conflicting interests of the United States Government and the people, the interests of the Wright and Curtiss Corporations, and that of inventors and owners of patents generally.

Ninth. Because of said cross-license agreement enabling powerful corporations to arbitrarily control aeroplane inventions and patents and thereby dominate the industry, as a result inventors and engineers will be deterred from making inventions and improvements in aircraft and aerial apparatus and prevented in securing money to carry on such work, and for the same reason capital and independent manufacturers will be deterred from engaging in the industry, and as a consequence and because of the power of the association and corporations dominating the industry prices will be advanced and fixed, and the Government will pay more for aircraft, and the whole industry will be retarded by the shutting out of a large percentage of inventors, engineers, designers, and independent manufacturers, such as normally engage and compete in business, and whereby the United States has led the world in the automobile and other industries which have been less hampered.

Tenth. Because said cross-license agreement, being of a nature to create a vicious monopoly and retard the perfection and development of aerial apparatus for this war and at the same time advance the cost to the Government by preventing legitimate rights and purposes of patents, and likewise all corporation enterprise, with the possibility of resulting in overrestricting legislation in both cases; and these things, as herein enumerated and pointed out, proving true, as I believe they are, the acts of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics in recommending and sustaining said cross-license agreement will tend to weaken confidence and support of the administration and correspondingly the Nation's best efforts in this war.

Eleventh. Because the policy of this Government should be to place orders for aircraft and aerial apparatus with a view of building up and stimulating independent manufacturers and thereby laying the foundation for a healthy, normal, commercial industry and at the same time improving the product and enable the Government to purchase war equipment at best advantage.

Mr. Fauber can not join this cross-license agreement and manufacture his planes for the Government unless he surrenders to the association his patents not only during his membership of it but for all time; and, of course, the same conditions surround everyone, whether he is at present an inventor or not, and very naturally discourages him from going to the expense, to say nothing of giving his time and energies to the improvement of aircraft now so greatly desired.

Mr. President, as I said, my conclusions may be erroneous. I confess that I have not had time to give this subject full and exhaustive investigation, but I can not understand why the great manufacturers of aircraft at the time the war began, unless they intended to control aircraft production absolutely, should have insisted upon the execution of such an agreement, because they are practically independent of all attacks upon their patents and at the same time are given the power through their agreement—and it is their agreement largely—to absorb all other devices, all other inventions relating to aircraft, and by that means acquire the benefit of the experiences of others at figures to be dictated by themselves. It looks like profiteering without any limitation, and I fear that much of the difficulties and disappointments which the Nation has encountered in attempting to carry out its aircraft program is due to the fact that all these conditions bestride the industry like a colossus. Of course, they have much to say in the granting of contracts to others, because would-be contractors, the owners of independent concerns, can be easily outbid if they decline to submit to the yoke, and when they must submit it is upon terms dictated by the association. The agreement is un-American; it is undemocratic; it is wrong. In my judgment it should be annulled without further delay.

Mr. President, I could refer to some other aspects of this subject; but I think I have said enough to acquaint the Senate and, I trust, the country with the chief features of this most remarkable agreement. The time of the Senate is very precious at present, a number of important measures are upon the calendar which must be considered, and I shall therefore content myself at this time by asking to have inserted in the RECORD: First, the section of the act of March 4, 1917, which I have read; second, the record of the proceedings of the advisory association forwarded to me by letter from the Secretary dated April 11, 1918; third, the letter of the secretary of state of New York giving the names of the incorporators of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association; fourth, the opinion of the Attorney General just referred to; and lastly, the agreement itself, dated July 24, 1917.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Act of Mar. 4, 1917.]

To enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to secure by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise such basic patent or patents as they may consider necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States and its dependencies for governmental and civil purposes, under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $1,000,000.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Replying to your letter of the 10th instant requesting certain information as to the cross license agreement of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, dated July 24, 1917, you are advised that Messrs. Fish and Crisp served as members of our subcommittee on patents, which consisted also of Messrs. Walcott, Stratton, Towers, Waldon, and Durand.

Messrs. Fish and Crisp had previously served as attorneys for the Wright and Curtiss companies, respectively, in their suit over the validity of the Wright patent. These men were not appointed on the committee until after the important features of the then proposed agreement had been decided upon, and they were selected to assist in the preparation of the agreement in legal form, partly because of their familiarity with the general subject of aeronautic patents and partly because of their familiarity with the cross license agreement adopted by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

For your further information I am inclosing an extract from the last Annual Report of the Executive Committee of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics bearing on the aeronautic patent question (pp. 12 to 25, inclusive).

Very truly, yours,

J. F. VICTORY,
Assistant Secretary.

[Extract from annual report executive committee National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, 1917.]

THE AERONAUTIC PATENT QUESTION.

On December 18, 1916, the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, as holders of the original patent No. 821393, issued to the Wright Brothers May 22, 1906, addressed letters to all the aircraft manufacturers, inclosing a form of license agreement for the use of the Wright patent, which they claimed was infringed by their manufacture of aircraft.

The terms of this proposed agreement, as stated by other aircraft manufacturers in letters addressed to the committee, were prohibitory from a business point of view, and also injurious to the development of aircraft and the aircraft industry in the United States.

The chairman reported the correspondence on this subject at the meeting of the executive committee on January 11.

The effect of the proposed action of the Wright Co. was felt by the War and Navy Departments in a pronounced increase in the cost of aircraft. On January 13, 1917, the committee received the following letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy:

"Mr. DEAR MR. WALCOTT: I desire to bring to the attention of the executive committee of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics a serious state of affairs which is being brought about by the uncertainty of the situation as regards aeronautic patents.

"Various combinations are threatening all other airplane and seaplane companies with suits for infringements of patents. The result is a general demoralization of the entire trade. It is difficult to get orders filled because some companies will not expend any more money on their plants for fear that suits brought against them will force them out of business.

"To protect themselves in case they are forced to pay large license fees, the companies have greatly increased the sale prices of their products. As the Army and Navy are the principal purchasers of aircraft in this country they are bearing the brunt of this levy.

"It is thought that the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics might be able in some way to render great assistance to the Navy by undertaking a study of this question and suggesting some line of action to be taken."

On January 31 the committee received the following letter from the Acting Secretary of War:

"SIR: In connection with the purchase of airplanes for the War Department, it has developed that certain patents which are alleged to be fundamental now appear to render the cost of airplane equipment excessive and, possibly, even to retard the development of the industry in this country.

"This department finds that at present each firm or corporation accepting War Department contracts adds to its bid the extra item of royalty which the firm is required to pay to the owners of the patents. This, among other things, has resulted in what is believed to be excessive prices charged to the Government for airplanes in this country.

"It is believed that this is a subject of such importance as to warrant its immediate consideration by your committee, to the end that a just and equitable solution to all concerned may be reached, which will apply not only to this department, but to all other departments of the Government purchasing airplanes."

In response to a letter requesting his opinion, Mr. Howard E. Coffin, of the Council of National Defense, wrote under date of January 30, 1917:

"I am thoroughly of the opinion that we should take such steps as will open up the Wright patent freely to all manufacturers. It may be wise to use this patent as a rallying point for the industry, but no financial penalty of consequence should be exacted from individual manufacturers. It is only through some such arrangement as will permit the free extension of commercial possibilities of aircraft through civilian channels that we may hope to build up a proper volume of business over a period of years.

"In short, I believe we can and must arrange for a purchase of this patent on the part of the Government at a reasonable figure before we can hope to develop a quantity manufacture of aircraft."

A special meeting of the executive committee was held February 1, at which the chairman presented the complete record of the patent question to date for the action of the committee.

The committee discussed the advisability of recommending legislation to authorize the purchase and condemnation of such patents as may be considered necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft.

Another special meeting was held on February 3, 1917, at which Messrs. E. F. Hagar and Frederick P. Fish, president and counsel, respectively, of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, were present on invitation.

The chairman stated that this special meeting had been called to obtain the views of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation in relation to the Wright patent, and, if possible, reach some understanding that would encourage development in the industry.

At this meeting it developed that Mr. Wright has no interest whatever in the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, having been paid a little more than a million dollars in cash for his patent; that this patent was used as a basis for interesting capital in the new company in the belief that it was basic and fundamental.

The Wright representatives stated that they believed the required license fee of $10,000 a year was equitable, and that any manufacturer who could not afford to pay it was not in a position to help in the development of the industry along scientific lines, and that, in other words, the manufacturer with a limited amount of capital invested in his business could not possibly make airplanes successfully in the present advancing state of the art.

They explained the position taken by their company and reviewed the history of its formation. They stated that their basic idea was to develop an aeronautic engine superior to any other in existence, and that to this end they were expending large sums of money in a scientific study of the problems involved, at a total of approximately half a million dollars monthly for all purposes, and were endeavoring to gather into their organization the best available talent.

After three hours' discussion, during which the position of the Government was clearly explained by the committee, the representatives of the Wright company expressed a willingness to cooperate with the Government in any way that would promote the development of the industry, and stated that they desired to clear the industry of fear of patent litigation.

Various suggestions were discussed as to the terms under which this cooperation could be effected.

A special meeting was also held on the following day, Sunday, February 4, 1917, at the residence of the chairman, at which the steps thus far taken were reviewed and discussed.

As a result of careful deliberation, a letter to the President was prepared and transmitted under date of February 5, 1917. With this letter the chairman inclosed copies of the letters of the War and Navy Departments previously referred to; a copy of the letter of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation of December 18, 1916, together with the application for license and form of agreement; and extracts from letters received from six aircraft manufacturers in the United States expressing their views of the situation.

This letter contained a brief review of the situation and a recommendation that legislation be approved in the form of an amendment to either the military or naval bill authorizing the Secretary of War to secure by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise such basic patent or patents as he may consider necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States and its dependencies for governmental and civil purposes, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

After approval by the President, the recommendations of the committee were transmitted by the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee.

On February 20, 1917, letters were addressed to the larger aircraft and engine manufacturers requesting the submission of lists of all patents owned or controlled by them which pertain to aircraft or parts of aircraft.

A meeting of the subcommittee on governmental relations was held on February 24, at which Messrs. Walcott, Stratton, Squier, Marvin, and Coffin were present; also Mr. John P. Tarbox, patent attorney for the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation. The purpose of the meeting was to ascertain the number and nature of the aeronautic patents owned or controlled by the Curtiss Co. From the data exhibited by Mr. Tarbox it appeared to the committee that the patent situation in the aeronautic industry was relatively simple as compared with that formerly existing in the automobile industry; that the Curtiss Co. owned a comparatively large number of patents; that the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation owned a possibly basic patent; and that there were but very few other scattering patents, none of which was of great importance.

Mr. Tarbox stated that Mr. G. C. Loening, of the Sturtevant Aeroplane Co., has a patent on a bridge-type landing gear, but that it is not of a controlling nature. He stated that he knew of no patents other than those owned by the Curtiss and Wright companies that might be considered basic. He stated that the Curtiss Co. had two controlling patents at present and expected to have a third in the near future. The first one (No. 1203550) covers a hydroaeroplane as regards longitudinal balance; the second patent, known as the "flying boat" patent, covers the relation of the position of the hull step to the center of pressure, the center of gravity, and the center of thrust; and the third patent will cover the single, central, mail float type, with two side floats. He stated that Mr. Curtiss has had no idea of demanding royalties from other manufacturers under existing conditions or of using his patents against competitors; that his purpose in obtaining patents was to fortify and defend himself in any patent litigation that might be started by others.

The naval appropriation act of 1918 contained the following provisions under the appropriation "Aviation":

"To enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to secure by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise such basic patent or patents as they may consider necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States and its dependencies, for governmental and civil purposes, under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $1,000,000.

"Provided, That such arrangements may be made in relation to the purchase of any basic patent connected with the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States as in the judgment of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy will be of the greatest advantage to the Government and to the development of the industry.

"Provided further, That in the event there shall be pending in court litigation involving the validity of said patent or patents, bond, with good and approved security in an amount sufficient to indemnify the United States, shall be required, payable to the United States, conditioned to repay to the United States the amount paid for said patent or patents in the event said patent or patents are finally adjudged invalid."

In letters dated March 10, 1917, the attention of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy was invited to the foregoing provision in the naval act, and the committee stated that it hoped to effect such arrangements for the solution of the patent question without the necessity of purchasing or condemning any patents.

On March 22, 1917, the subcommittee on patents held a meeting, at which a suggested plan for the solution of the patent question was adopted. The committee then called in representatives of the Wright-Martin and Curtiss companies and the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association and submitted for discussion the terms of the suggested agreement, which, it was pointed out, were merely suggestions.

On March 23, 1917, the subcommittee on patents submitted the following report reviewing the steps taken up to date and suggesting a plan for the solution of the patent question:

"On March 2, 1917, Congress appropriated $1,000,000 'to enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to secure by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise such basic patent or patents as they may consider necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States for governmental and civil purposes.' This action was taken on account of the general belief that the needed expansion of the aircraft industry, calling for the investment of large sums of money, was being very seriously impeded by threatened lawsuits and the demand for the payment of what was looked upon as excessive royalties under certain important aeronautical patents. One such demand upon the manufacturers called for a royalty of 5 per cent on the price of the complete plane with motor and a minimum annual payment of $10,000 per manufacturer.

"All makers in bidding for Government business were obliged to add to their bids an extra amount representing the royalty they would have to pay under this one patent alone, and the Army and Navy were confronted with many bids in which the contingent royalty amounted to over $1,000 per aeroplane.

"The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, in whose hands the problem was placed for recommendation, realized that it would be undesirable to use the fund provided for the purchase of patents until every means had been exhausted to secure a settlement on a reasonable basis between the different parties in interest. It realized that even in our present need it would be unwise to condemn a patent except as a last resort. The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is particularly anxious to encourage invention along aeronautical lines instead of discouraging it.

"In reviewing the records of the Army and Navy Departments as to planes purchased during the eight years prior to our recent heavy appropriations for aerial defense, it was brought out that four men in four different factories supplied all of those planes and apparently contributed most in the development and reduction to practice of the aviation art. Those named in the order of their appearance on the records are Wright, Curtiss, Burgess, and Martin. By a strange coincidence, Curtiss and Burgess joined hands and later the Wright and Martin interests came together.

"While there are other aircraft patents, it was found that these two combinations owned and controlled what might be considered the two dominating groups of patents.

"The national advisory committee has therefore been influenced to a slight extent in its consideration of the patent question by the moral obligation that should be added to the patent rights of these two groups. Recognition of the two groups of patents by the later industry and by the Government becomes automatically recognition of practically all of the actual reduction of the art to practice by Wright, Curtiss, Burgess, and Martin.

"Numerous meetings were held in New York, Buffalo, and Washington, in an endeavor to arrive at a basis of settlement that would comprehend all of the patents owned or controlled by each group, that would be a fair recognition of their patent rights, and that would at the same time cement together and strengthen the industry.

"The plan finally agreed upon by the committee and submitted to the two companies for their consideration and early report is framed upon the following basis:

"First. That it is desirable to avoid the delays and expense necessary to adjudicate all of the patents in question.

"Second. That it is not within the province of this committee to attempt to determine the value of one patent against another or the validity of any patent.

"Third. That it is desirable at once to arrive at some fair basis for the recognition of the patents of both parties that will clear up this matter and permit the more rapid expansion of the industry.

"Fourth. That the relative contributions to the establishment of the aircraft industry as between Wright and Martin on the one hand and Curtiss and Burgess on the other hand may be paid to offset each other, and that the recognition of each should be in the same total amount.

"Fifth. That by reason of Curtiss's patents running approximately three times as long as Wright's, the royalty to the Curtiss-Burgess group might be made about one-third of the amount per plane to be allowed to the Wright-Martin group.

"Sixth. That instead of endeavoring to establish a difference as between an airplane, seaplane, or flying boat, the royalty should be spread uniformly upon all three types.

"Seventh. That the royalty should be a flat rate on each plane with or without engine instead of a percentage of cost or selling price.

"Eighth. That royalty should commence upon all planes manufactured and sold after March 2, 1917, and that those manufactured and sold prior to that date be exempted from royalty.

"In submitting this plan, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics have not attempted to draw up a finished legally approved agreement, but instead to present its plan in the simplest possible form.

PROPOSED PLAN.

"First. That all airplane manufacturers as members of the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association join in a cross-licensing agreement as of March 2, 1917.

"Second. That this agreement cover all patents now owned or controlled by or which may later be owned or controlled by the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association or any of its members; the terms of the cross-licensing agreement to be in general based upon the similar agreement existing in the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce known as the cross-licensing agreement.

"Third. That each member pay into the treasury of the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association the sum of $200 for each airplane manufactured and sold (with or without engine) by that member, these payments to be made quarterly, and to continue subject to the conditions hereinafter provided.

"Fourth. That the funds thus collected be disposed as follows:

"At each quarterly period for each airplane manufactured and sold during the preceding quarter there shall be paid, $135 to the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, $40 to the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation, and $25 to the treasury of the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association, to cover its operating expenses and to create a fund for further development.

"Fifth. Payment to the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation shall cease May 22, 1923, and payment to the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation shall cease at such time as the total amount paid to them shall equal the amount paid to the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, but in any event shall cease October 30, 1933.

"Sixth. After May 22, 1923, the amount paid per airplane by each manufacturer shall be reduced by the amount of the Wright-Martin royalty, which will have ceased on that date, and shall thereafter be $65 per airplane manufactured and sold during such remaining period as payments of royalty are made to the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation, as above provided for.

"Seventh. An airplane as herein mentioned shall be understood to mean any form of heavier-than-air craft using wing surfaces for sustentation, stabilizing surfaces, rudders for steering, and power plant for propulsion through the air, whether operated from land or water."

On the same date copies of the report of the subcommittee on patents were sent to the Secretaries of War and the Navy, the Wright and Curtiss companies, and the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association.

At a meeting of the subcommittee on patents on April 24, 1917, it was recorded as the sense of the meeting that the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association should undertake the negotiations necessary to effecting a cross-licensing agreement, and that this committee is willing at the present time to assist in an advisory capacity only, and the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association was so advised.

After the appointment of Messrs. Crisp and Fish as members of the subcommittee on patents efforts were made to bring these gentlemen together in conference to work out the details of the suggested agreement.

No action having been taken by the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association or the respective interested parties, the executive committee, on June 14, authorized the patents committee to take whatever steps appeared necessary to effect a solution of the question, and recommended that in the matter of royalties to be paid to the Wright and Curtiss companies a reasonable maximum be agreed to, not to exceed $2,000,000 to each company.

At the meeting of the executive committee on June 14, 1917, there were present Messrs. Walcott, Stratton, Durand, Marvin, Squier, Taylor, Towers, Richardson, Foulois, Waldon, Coffin, and others.

After presentation of the report of the patents committee and discussion of the question, on motion duly seconded and carried it was—

"Resolved, That the patents committee be authorized to take whatever steps appear necessary to effect a solution of the patent question, and that the executive committee recommend that in the matter of royalties to be paid the Wright and Curtiss companies a reasonable maximum be agreed to, not to exceed $2,000,000 to each company, and further, that the patents committee be instructed to hold a meeting on Monday, June 18, to consider this question to which representatives of the Wright and Curtiss companies and of the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association should be invited."

The subcommittee on patents accordingly held a meeting on June 18, at which representatives of the Wright and Curtiss companies and of the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association were present.

At this meeting the provisions of the plan suggested on March 23, 1917, were taken as the basis for discussion and all phases of the general proposition were canvassed.

The members of the patents committee withdrew for an executive session, at which after deliberation and on motion duly seconded and unanimously carried, the following report was adopted;

"It is recommended that the 'proposed plan' for the solution of the patent situation between the Wright-Martin and Curtiss-Burgess groups, as submitted in the report of the patents committee dated March 23, 1917, be followed out in all essentials with the following exceptions:

"a. It is recommended that the agreement be not made retroactive to March 2, 1917, but be made to take effect July 1, 1917.

"b. That in no case shall there be more than $2,000,000 paid to either the Wright-Martin or the Curtiss-Burgess groups."

The above report was presented to the manufacturers, and it was accepted without reservation by the Curtiss Co., and by the Wright Co., with a reservation as to sublicensing the Hispano-Suiza engine.

The committee discussed the subject of compensation to aircraft manufacturers for the placing by the Government with other manufacturers the plans, specifications, heat treatments, factory methods, etc., of any manufacturer's design of airplane.

After discussion and deliberation, it was recorded as the sense of the meeting that separate agreement from the proposed cross-licensing agreement should be arranged for by the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association covering the use by any one manufacturer of the designs of another manufacturer at the request of the Government.

That the amount of such compensation between manufacturers should be 1 per cent of the price of the airplane, exclusive of engine, to be paid by the manufacturer ordered by the Government to produce an airplane designed and developed by some other manufacturer to the manufacturer who had so designed and developed it.

That in no case should there be paid to any one manufacturer a sum totaling more than $50,000 for the designs, specifications, heat treatments, and other factory methods upon any one type of airplane.

The object of each manufacturer in maintaining a laboratory is to develop designs satisfactory to the Government that will enable him to obtain the maximum capacity of his factory in Government business.

The object of the above plan is to encourage development to the greatest degree and to provide a simple working basis whereby the manufacturer successful in producing a type of airplane so satisfactory to the Government that his own facilities are insufficient to meet the Government's needs will receive compensation in a moderate amount per airplane upon such airplanes as are made under Government order by other manufacturers.

It was further suggested that this same basis be used where developed designs of engine are introduced into other factories than the ones that designed and developed them.

The meeting adjourned with the understanding that Mr. Crisp would prepare a form of agreement after further discussion. The minutes of the meeting were sent to all parties in attendance.

The subcommittee on patents met on July 10 to consider the terms of the draft of proposed cross-license agreement as prepared by Mr. Crisp, after consultation with Mr. Fish and the latter's business partner, Mr. Neavo, and Messrs. Houston, Tarbox, Flint, and Russell.

This meeting was attended by officers and members of the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association and representatives of the Wright and Curtiss companies. Mr. Crisp submitted a draft of the proposed cross-license agreement and explained that the plan as originally proposed by the patents committee had been modified in the following important particulars:

First. All reference to engines and engine accessories was omitted, for the reason that the principal engine patent—Hispano-Suiza—could not be included in the agreement because of restrictions in the special contract between the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation and the owners of the patent, and for the further reason that engine patents in common use in this country were not considered basic.

Second. That after $2,000,000 had been paid to the Wright-Martin company the subscribers to the agreement would continue to pay $200 per airplane, and that payments of the balance then due the Curtiss company would be made at the rate of $175 per airplane—this with a view to clearing up the situation as quickly as possible.

Third. That the agreement contemplates additional consideration to a party or parties who may develop hereafter an airplane or engine or any device of special importance capable of use in an airplane, which would also include, first, a new basic type of airplane; second, one which involves a great improvement on the principles existing in the industry; and, third, an airplane radical in its departure from existing types.

The provisions of the proposed agreement were generally discussed.

By resolution of the meeting the chairman appointed a committee of five on requirements for membership in the Aircraft Manufacturers' Association, with instructions to give careful attention to the legal phases of limitation of stock ownership in such a corporation.

The committee, as appointed by the chairman, consisted of Messrs. Crisp (chairman), Harris, Mingle, Russell, and Houston. After an executive session the committee on qualifications for membership submitted the following report, which was adopted:

"A stockholder of this corporation shall be a responsible manufacturer of airplanes, airplane engines or parts, and accessories used in airplanes; a responsible manufacturer who intends to become a bona fide producer of airplanes or airplane engines, parts, or accessories; or a manufacturer to whom the Government has given a contract for the construction of 10 or more complete airplanes or airplane engines; but no stockholder herein shall acquire or own more than one share of the stock of said corporation."

By resolution adopted by a divided vote it was recorded as the sense of the meeting that engines should be included in the terms of the cross-license agreement. This necessitated redrafting the cross-license agreement, and there being no objection, the chairman appointed a special committee for this purpose, consisting of Messrs. Crisp (chairman), Tarbox, Houston, Mingle, and Russell.

The subcommittee on patents held another meeting July 12, 1917, immediately preceding the regular monthly meeting of the executive committee. The chairman reported that at an informal session of the subcommittee on patents on the preceding evening, at which Messrs. Durand, Crisp Waldon, Towers, Tarbox, Houston, and Harris were present, the various features of the proposed cross-license agreement were discussed. Mr. Crisp laid before the committee a draft of the proposed cross-license agreement prepared in accordance with the recommendation of the conference on the preceding evening.

The chairman reported that an attempt to include the cross-licensing of engines under the terms of the cross-license agreement, as recommended by the conference held on July 10, developed many difficulties of a practical nature, especially in regard to the proper payments for the support of the proposed organization as between the engine manufacturers and plane manufacturers. He reported that it had also been suggested at the conference on July 11 that the advantages of cross-licensing of engines might better be realized through necessary modifications in the existing cross-license agreement covering the automobile industry. He reported further that as a result of these considerations members of the committee present at the conference on July 11 took action recommending the omission of engines from the terms of the cross-license agreement and instructed Mr. Crisp and his associates to prepare the final draft of the cross-license agreement in accordance with this recommendation.

After consideration of this recommendation of the conference on July 11 and after further consideration of all factors bearing upon the question the proposed draft of cross-license agreement as submitted by Mr. Crisp was, on motion duly seconded, unanimously approved and recommended to the executive committee for its approval.

At the meeting of the executive committee on July 12 the subcommittee on patents submitted the approved draft of cross-license agreement, which the chairman stated in its general terms and details had already received the informal approval of the aircraft manufacturers, and this he submitted as the report of the subcommittee on patents with a recommendation for its approval by the executive committee.

On motion, duly seconded and carried, it was

"Resolved, That the report of the patents committee on the proposed cross-license agreement be approved."

Under date of July 27 the chairman addressed letters to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy reporting the solution of the patent question and inclosing a copy of the cross-license agreement which had been accepted by the aircraft manufacturers and signed by them as members of a new "Manufacturers' Aircraft Association."

On the same date the chairman addressed a letter to the president of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association recommending the acceptance of the cross-license agreement by the association and its members and that aircraft manufacturers generally be invited to subscribe to same in the interests of harmony and efficiency and to the end that the industry may be enabled to expand freely in order to meet the demands of the Government for the quantity production of aircraft.

The subcommittee on patents was discharged on August 7, 1917.

THE WORK OF THE SUBCOMMITTEES.

Following is an outline of the general work of the various subcommittees during the past year:

Aerial mail service: The subcommittee on aerial mail service was authorized by the executive committee at the meeting on December 7, 1916, for the purpose of cooperating with the Post Office Department in accordance with the request of the Second Assistant Postmaster General. The committee as originally organized consisted of Messrs. Squier (chairman), Marvin, and Stratton, and on March 30, 1917, Messrs. Clark and Towers were added.

The committee held a meeting on January 9, 1917, at which a representative of the Post Office Department was present. A plan of cooperation was formulated and means of overcoming difficulties confronting the Post Office Department were discussed. The committee advised the Post Office Department that in its opinion it would be impractical at that time to place a contract for aerial mail service, and that therefore the Post Office Department should take the initiative and establish such service within its own organization, and that the first experimental route should be selected with a view to inaugurating the service under as favorable conditions as possible. The committee suggested that the first experimental route should be between Washington and Philadelphia or Washington and New York.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1918.

Hon. C. S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your letter of the 10th instant, there is inclosed herewith a copy of the opinion rendered by the Attorney General on October 6, 1917, to the Secretary of War relative to the legal status of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, and involving in particular the question whether the cross-licensing agreement entered into between that corporation and its subscribers is in any way in contravention of the antitrust laws.

Respectfully,

G. CARROLL TODD,
Assistant to the Attorney General
(For the Attorney General).

OCTOBER 6, 1917.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 17, 1917, in which you ask for my opinion concerning the legal status of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and in particular whether the cross-license agreement entered into between that corporation and its subscribers (stockholders) is in any way in contravention of the antitrust statutes of the United States.

You submitted with your letter a copy of the cross-license agreement and a digest of certain of the minutes of the National Advisory Committe for Aeronautics (hereafter referred to as Advisory Committee) relating to the subject. The other papers and information necessary for determination of the questions involved were not immediately available, but have since been furnished by that committee at various dates from September 19 to 28.

The Manufacturers' Aircraft Association (Inc.) (hereafter referred to as Association (Inc.)), was formed and the cross-license agreement entered into under the following circumstances, as gathered from the data submitted:

The principal patents in the airplane industry were controlled by the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation and the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation. The former, controlling what it claimed to be a basic patent, was demanding high royalties from all other aircraft manufacturers. The latter, controlling numerous important patents, was likewise making demands for royalties upon the other aircraft manufacturers. The patents controlled by these companies were of such a character as to make it difficult for any aircraft manufacturer to construct any modern approved form of airplane without infringing one or more alleged patents of each of these companies. The result of these patent claims was not only to render the cost of airplanes to the Government excessive, but also to make it difficult for the Government to get its orders filled, because some of the airplane manufacturers, in view of impending patent litigation, were unwilling to make further expenditures upon their plants.

Confronted with this serious crisis, the War Department and the Navy Department requested the Advisory Committee to investigate the situation and to suggest a solution for the unsatisfactory conditions existing in the airplane industry. Acting in accordance with these requests, the Advisory Committee proceeded to make a careful study of the situation, and after several months of investigation and numerous conferences with all interests directly involved recommended the formation of an association of aircraft manufacturers with a form of cross-license agreement.

Pursuant to the recommendation of that committee, the Association (Inc.) was formed and the cross-license agreement now under consideration was entered into.

Practically all of the manufacturers of airplanes have since become stockholders in the Association (Inc.) and parties to the cross-license agreement. The royalties to be paid under the cross-license agreement in respect to the patents of both the Wright-Martin and Curtiss corporations are materially lower than those previously demanded by the Wright-Martin Corporation alone. The arrangement will result in a substantial saving to the Government.

You state in your letter:

"In accordance with the arrangement thus developed, the War Department now desires to proceed with the placing of contracts for airplanes with airplane manufacturers thus organized."

The Federal antitrust laws prohibit every combination and agreement that produces or tends to produce a monopoly in the interstate and foreign commerce of the United States or that is otherwise unduly restrictive of competitive conditions in such commerce. Their fundamental purpose is to prevent undue interference with the free play of competition without prohibiting normal and usual contracts and agreements entered into for the purpose of promoting the legitimate interests of the trader or of the industry in which he is engaged. The questions here involved must be determined in the light of this fundamental purpose of the antitrust laws.

In considering the questions submitted I have examined the cross-license agreement, the articles of incorporation, the by-laws, and the voting-trust agreement of the Association (Inc.), together with other data relating to that association furnished by the advisory committee. I have also examined and considered the criticisms of the arrangement in the "protest of the Aeronautical Society of America against the formation under Government auspices of an aircraft trust."

The cross-license agreement between the Association (Inc.) and such persons (hereinafter called subscribers) as shall become stockholders therein was entered into on July 24, 1917. (Cross-license agreement, p. 1.) The subscribers under that agreement agree:

To grant to each other licenses under all airplane patents of the United States (with unimportant exceptions) now or hereafter owned or controlled by them. (Cross-license agreement, Art. II, p. 2.)

To appoint the Association (Inc.) their agent with full power to grant the nonexclusive licenses provided for in the agreement in the form attached thereto. (Art. III, pp. 3, 15.)

Not to contract for rights under any airplane patents in such a way as to prevent the owner from granting similar rights to other subscribers on the same terms, unless the subscriber at the same time obtains the further privilege of itself granting rights under the patent, which of itself shall have the effect of bringing the rights acquired by the subscriber under the operation of the cross-license agreement. (Art. III, pp. 3–4.)

Not to enter into any agreement in respect to the subscriber's privileges under any airplane patent in such a way as to restrict the operation of the cross-license agreement in respect thereto. (Art. IV, p. 4.)

Not to grant licenses under airplane patents to others than subscribers upon lower terms of royalty than those provided for in the agreement in the case of subscribers. (Art. IV, p. 4.)

To submit claims for compensation in respect to airplane patents or patent rights hereafter acquired to a board of arbitrators, consisting of one member appointed by the board of directors of the Association (Inc.), another by the subscriber making the claim, and a third by the other two, who shall determine the total amount of compensation, if any, to be paid for the same, and the rate of royalty to be paid toward such compensation by any subscriber desiring to take a license under such patent. (Art. V, pp. 4–5.)

To waive all claims as against each other for infringements prior to July 1, 1917 (Art. XIV, p. 13), to make various reports, and to keep various accounts, etc.

To pay to the Association (Inc.) specified amounts upon every airplane manufactured and sold by the subscriber until the expiration of specified patents controlled by the Wright-Martin and Curtiss corporations, or until each of those corporations shall have received the aggregate sum of $2,000,000, and to make other payments of minor importance. (Art. VIII, pp. 8–9.)

The Association (Inc.) agrees:

To accept the appointment as agent of its subscribers for granting and enforcing the license provided for in the agreement, and for enforcing the other obligations of the subscribers under the agreement. (Art. II, p. 3.)

To make specified payments to the Wright-Martin and Curtiss corporations until the expiration of designated patents or until each of those corporations shall have received the aggregate sum of $2,000,000, and to pay to the other subscribers the royalties, if any, to which they are entitled under the cross-license agreement. (Art. IX, pp. 9–10.)

The cross-license agreement, as appears from its principal provisions summarized above, makes available to each subscriber of the Association (Inc.) the patents of all the other subscribers, and thus in this important respect instead of restraining trade facilitates competition among the subscribers of that association.

To thus make the patents of each available to all it was, of course, necessary to provide special compensation for those controlling the more important patents in the industry. This, as appears from the data submitted by the advisory committee, was the reason for the special payments to the Wright-Martin and Curtiss corporations.

The provision requiring these payments to be made to these corporations upon every airplane manufactured and sold by the subscribers at first sight seems objectionable as possibly designed to extend the patent rights of these corporations to objects not covered by their patents.

However, the circumstances which led to the negotiation of the cross-license agreement refute this. The numerous patents controlled by the Wright-Martin and Curtiss corporations made it difficult for a manufacturer to construct an up-to-date airplane without infringing one or more of the alleged patents of each of these corporations.

For this reason the advisory committee deemed it advisable to provide for a fixed payment to be made to these corporations in respect to every airplane manufactured and thus avoid the controversies which would almost inevitably arise if the payments were made dependent upon the delicate question of which and how many of the patents of the Wright-Martin and Curtiss corporations had been used in the manufacture of a particular airplane.

The provision requiring subscribers to submit claims for compensation in respect to patents subsequently acquired by them to a board of arbitrators, and to license each other under such patents at the rates of royalty fixed by that board might possibly be used to secure valuable inventions at unreasonable compensation. But it serves the purpose of keeping the patents of each of the subscribers open to all, and that doubtless was the purpose for which it was adopted. Its possible abuse, therefore, scarcely justifies its condemnation in the absence of such abuse.

Not to go into further detail, the provisions of the cross-license agreement seem to me to be reasonably adapted to secure cooperation among the parties to the agreement in the interchange of their patent privileges without imposing by their necessary effect any undue restriction of competition in violation of the Federal antitrust laws, but rather rendering competition freer by giving every responsible manufacturer of aircraft access to all the inventions in that field.

The by-laws of the Association (Inc.) authorize any responsible manufacturer or prospective manufacturer of airplanes, or any manufacturer to whom the United States has given a contract for the construction of 10 or more airplanes, or any owner of United States patents relating to the same, to become a party to the cross-license agreement upon subscribing for a share of the stock of that association and signing the voting-trust agreement provided for in the by-laws.

The certificate of incorporation of the Association (Inc.) limits the stock of that association to 100 shares of no nominal or par value, and authorizes it to issue and sell the same from time to time at their fair market value. The subscription value of this stock has since been fixed by the Association (Inc.) at $1,000 per share. The Association (Inc.) under its certificate of incorporation enjoys broad powers not material to the validity of the arrangement here under consideration.

The limitation of the number of shares of capital stock to 100, taken in connection with other provisions of the by-laws and cross-license agreement, has the effect of limiting the number of aircraft manufacturers who may become parties to the cross-license agreement to 100. In the expansion of the industry this limitation may prove objectionable, but the advisory committee informs me that that number is far beyond the probable number of such manufacturers in the near future.

The voting-trust agreement, in effect, gives the management of the Association (Inc.) for a period of five years to three voting trustees, to wit, a representative of the Wright-Martin and Curtiss Corporations, a representative of the smaller manufacturers, and a member of the advisory committee.

The most questionable provision in the entire arrangement is that requiring the aircraft manufacturers who become stockholders in the Association (Inc.) and parties to the cross-license agreement to sign the voting-trust agreement. This provision, however, in view of the circumstances noted below, does not, in my opinion, constitute a restraint of trade in violation of the Federal antitrust laws.

The primary functions of the Association (Inc.), so far as material to the arrangement here under consideration, are to act as an agent for the parties to the cross-license agreement in executing prescribed licenses, collecting and distributing royalties, and appointing through its board of directors one of the arbitrators to pass upon the value of patents acquired subsequent to the execution of the cross-license agreement.

Under the arrangement the interests of the Wright-Martin and Curtiss Corporations, as owners of the principal patents and entitled to the bulk of the royalties provided for in the agreement, are somewhat antagonistic to the interests of the smaller manufacturers who have to pay these royalties. If all the manufacturers had been given equal voice in the Association (Inc.), the smaller manufacturers together would have been enabled to control the Association (Inc.), to wit, the agent of the parties on whose responsibility and vigilance the Wright-Martin and Curtiss Corporations are so vitally interested. This conflict of interests accounts for the adoption of the voting-trust agreement under which the Wright-Martin and Curtiss Corporations named one trustee, the smaller manufacturers another trustee, and a party not favorable to either interest, namely, a member of the Advisory Committee, was elected for the third trustee.

Not to go into further detail, it suffices to say that upon the data submitted to me I am of the opinion that the Association (Inc.), as now constituted, and the cross-license agreement under which it is now operated, are not in contravention of the antitrust laws of the United States.

Respectfully,

T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

CROSS-LICENSE AGREEMENT.

This agreement, made this 24th day of July, 1917, between the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association (Inc.), a New York corporation (hereinafter called the "company"), party of the first part, and each person, firm, or corporation (hereinafter called the "subscriber" or "subscribers") as shall become stockholders of the said company in the manner and under the conditions provided in the by-laws thereof (which for the purpose of this agreement are made a part hereof), and become parties to this agreement, parties of the second part:

Whereas the parties hereto are interested in the manufacture, sale, and use of airplanes, as hereinafter defined, and desire to promote and develop the industry in which they are engaged, and to encourage and advance the art applicable thereto; and

Whereas the said development and advancement in the past have not been capable of as complete accomplishment as is desirable, because of the existence of certain United States patents claimed to be basic in their nature, upon which suits have been brought, or threatened, for alleged infringement and for the collection of royalties and damages in connection therewith; and

Whereas it is desired to prevent and avoid such litigations or threatened litigations in the future and to give to all of the subscribers the right to manufacture, sell, and use airplanes embodying the inventions of each of the subscribers and to that end it is desired that licenses be granted as herein expressed: Now, this agreement witnesseth:

That for and in consideration of the premises, the covenants and conditions herein contained, and for other good and valuable considerations moving between the company and each of the subscribers hereto, and between the subscribers themselves, it is covenanted and agreed as follows:

I. DEFINITIONS.

The word "airplane," as used in this agreement, shall be understood to mean any form of heavier-than-air craft using wing surfaces for sustaining it, and to include propelling means, propellers, propeller hubs, radiators, and all parts and accessories used or useful in the airplane, except the engine and its accessories.

The words "airplane patent," as used in this agreement, shall be understood to mean any patent covering inventions for or capable of use in or in connection with airplanes, including propellers, propeller hubs, radiators, and all parts of airplanes and accessories used or useful in the airplane, except the engine and its accessories.

II. LICENSES AND POWERS GRANTED.

The "subscribers" grant, agree to grant, and cause to be granted to each other, licenses to make, use, and sell airplanes, under all airplane patents of the United States now or hereafter owned or controlled by them or any of them, or by any firm, corporation, or association owned or controlled by them, or under which they, or any of them, or any such firm, corporation, or association, have or shall have the right to grant licenses, in and throughout the United States, its territories and dependencies, for use therein or abroad, except that no rights, express or implied, are hereby granted under any foreign patents, nor shall said rights or the licenses, herein provided for, apply to or include the use of said patents in their application to other than airplanes, and except, further, that no licenses are hereby granted under the Dunne patents No. 975403 issued November 15, 1910, and No. 1003721 issued September 19, 1911, rights under which are held by the Burgess Co.

All licenses provided for herein shall run to the full end of the term of the letters patent under which the license is or is to be granted, and shall be personal, indivisible, nonassignable, and irrevocable, except for the causes and in the manner hereinafter stated.

The "subscribers" hereby designate, constitute, and appoint the "company" (and the "company" hereby accepts the appointment) as their true, sufficient, and lawful agent and attorney in fact, for them and in their respective names, to make and execute licenses in writing in the form hereto annexed and to deliver the same to those of the "subscribers" who at the time are stockholders of the "company" not in default hereunder and who shall have executed an agreement in writing of like tenor to this, and to enforce said licenses and any and all other obligations (including the obligation to make payments) of the "subscribers" under this agreement; and the "subscribers" hereby give and grant unto said "company" as full, complete, and ample power and authority in the premises as the "subscribers" themselves now have and possess.

All licenses provided for herein, when made, executed, and delivered in accordance with the provisions hereof, shall have the same force and effect as if they had been executed and delivered by the "subscribers" themselves.

III. COVENANTS OF FURTHER ASSURANCE.

(a) Each "subscriber," now or hereafter, having rights under any United States airplane patent or invention of such character that it has legal right and power to procure the grant of rights thereunder to others, but is not itself empowered to grant such rights, covenants to procure the execution of such further instrument as may be necessary to empower the "company" to grant rights under such patent or with reference to such invention to the extent and in the manner herein provided.

(b) Each "subscriber" covenants that it will not contract for or obtain any rights under any such patent or invention in such manner that its owner would be prevented from granting to other "subscribers" hereto similar rights on the same terms, unless the "subscriber" obtains at the same time the further privilege to grant rights under said patent or said invention, whereby the same may and will be brought under the operation of the instrument.

IV. COVENANTS AGAINST OTHER LICENSES.

Each "subscriber" covenants that it has not heretofore entered and will not hereafter enter into any contract or arrangement whereby its privileges under United States airplane patents, issued or to be issued, inventions, and rights owned or controlled by it have been or shall be diminished or surrendered so as to exclude or restrict the operation of this instrument in respect thereto. Each "subscriber" further covenants that it will not grant licenses under any such patents for use in airplanes with reference to which it is receiving royalties hereunder to any other person, firm, or corporation on more favorable or lower terms of royalty than those herein provided or which may become more favorable or lower during the term of such license.

V. AFTER ACQUIRED PATENTS.

When a "subscriber" shall hereafter acquire a United States airplane patent, or any right thereunder, he shall be entitled to compensation for the use thereof if the patent or patent right covers an invention which secures the performance of a function not before known to the art or constitutes an adaptation for the first time to commercial use of an invention known to the industry to be desirable of use but not used because of lack of adaptation, or is otherwise of striking character or constitutes a radical departure from previous practice, or if either the price paid therefor or the amount expended in developing the same is such as to justify such compensation, provided that at the time said patent or patent right is reported to the "company," as required in subdivision (b) of Paragraph VII, the "subscriber" claims such compensation and states the grounds on which such claim is based. Such report and claim shall be submitted to a board of arbitration to be selected in the manner provided for in Paragraph XIII hereof, which board shall determine whether such compensation shall be paid, and if so, the total amount thereof and the rate of royalty or other payments which shall be paid (toward such compensation) by any "subscriber" desiring and taking a license under said patent, and shall also fix the time or times when said royalties or other amounts shall be paid.

VI. SPECIAL MODELS.

If any "subscriber" shall have developed the design and manufacture of any special model of airplane or airplane engine or other device used in an airplane (except the airplanes manufactured by the Burgess Co. under the Dunne patents hereinbefore mentioned and the Hispano-Suiza aeronautical engine manufactured by the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation or its subsidiaries), which the United States Government may at any time desire to have manufactured in the factory of any other "subscriber" or in the factory of any manufacturer not a "subscriber" hereto, the said "subscriber" agrees that it will furnish to the other "subscriber" or said other manufacturer such complete specifications, drawings, and other production data as may be required for use in the manufacture of such special model, provided that and upon condition that the "subscriber" or other manufacturer in whose factory the work is placed by the United States Government shall agree with said Government and with the "subscriber" owning said specifications, etc., to pay and shall pay into the treasury of the "company" 1 per cent upon the contract price paid by the Government for each airplane or airplane engine or other device manufactured for it in accordance with said specifications, etc.

If the manufacture of such special model is conducted by one not a "subscriber," such manufacturer shall also agree to pay into the treasury of the "company" such royalty as a "subscriber" would have been obliged to pay had it made and sold the airplane, engine, or other device, including the amount specified in subdivisions (a) and (b) of Paragraph VIII hereof, if an airplane, with or without engine, is the thing manufactured for and sold to the Government.

VII. REPORTS TO THE "COMPANY."

The following reports in writing shall be rendered to the "company" by each "subscriber" at the time or times hereinafter set forth:

(a) At the time of the execution of this agreement each "subscriber" shall report all United States airplane patents and inventions, together with serial numbers and filing dates of all pending applications for such patents, and all rights under such patents and inventions then owned or controlled by it, but no omission from such report shall exclude the patent, application, or right so omitted from the operation of this agreement.

(b) Within 30 days after the acquisition by any "subscriber" of any United States patent (other than patents to be issued upon inventions now owned by it) or right within the scope of this agreement each such "subscriber" shall report such acquisition, together with all the facts known to it as to such patent or right and its manner of acquisition. If such "subscriber" claims that additional compensation should be paid to it for licenses under such patent or right, it shall so claim in its report.

(c) On the 10th day of January, April, July, and October in each year each "subscriber" shall report the number of airplanes (with or without engine) sold and delivered by it, together with the names of the purchasers and the dates of delivery, or put into use for other than experimental or development purposes, or shipped out of the United States, during the three preceding calendar months.

(d) On the 10th day of January, April, July, and October in each year each "subscriber" shall report the number of airplanes, airplane engines, or other devices for use in airplanes which it has sold and delivered during the preceding three calendar months made from specifications, drawings, and other production data obtained from any other "subscriber," as provided in Paragraph VI hereof, together with the sales price and the dates of delivery; and there shall be included in the same report a copy of any agreement which the "subscriber" shall have made with another manufacturer as provided in said paragraph.

(e) Each license to other than "subscribers," as provided in Paragraph IV hereof, shall be reported within 30 days after its delivery.

The first of each of the reports specified in subdivisions (c) and (d) hereof shall be made by each "subscriber" on the 10th day of January, April, July, or October first occurring after it has become a "subscriber" hereto, and shall cover the period from July 1, 1917, to the first day of the month in which the report is due.

Each of the "subscribers" hereto shall keep separate books of account showing all business done under or subject to the operation of this agreement. The "company" may at any time have a New York certified public accountant, to be designated by it, audit such books of account of the "subscribers," together with such other accounts as the accountant may deem necessary, in order to verify or correct the reports herein provided for, and the "company" shall have such audit made when any "subscriber" so demands. Such audit, however, shall be limited to ascertaining whether the reports herein provided for are properly made and to correcting the same, if necessity for correction shall appear. No information obtained from any such audit shall be reported by the Accountant or given to any of the parties hereto except as it directly applies to the reports required by this agreement.

VIII. PAYMENTS TO THE "COMPANY."

Each "subscriber" agrees to pay into the treasury of the "company" on the 10th days of January, April, July, and October in each year the following sums of money, to wit:

(a) On each airplane, with or without engine, required to be reported as provided in subdivision (c) of Paragraph VII hereof, the sum of $200 until such time as the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation and the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation shall have been paid the aggregate sums provided for in subdivisions (a) and (b) of Paragraph IX hereof.

(b) On each airplane, with or without engine, required to be reported as provided for in subdivision (c) of Paragraph VII hereof, such sum, not to exceed $25, as the board of directors of the "company" may from time to time fix and determine as payable after the above-mentioned aggregate sums shall have been paid to the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation and the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation.

(c) Such amount or amounts as the board of arbitration may specify as special compensation for after-acquired patents as provided in Paragraph V hereof, and required to be reported in subdivision (c) of Paragraph VII.

(d) Such amount or amounts as may be payable with reference to the use of specifications, drawings, and data as provided in Paragraph VI hereof, including the royalty payments therein provided for, but all 1 per cent payments on account of the use of such specifications, drawings, and data covering any one model shall cease when the total paid by all users shall aggregate $50,000.

(e) All royalties received under licenses referred to in subdivision (e) of Paragraph VII.

Each "subscriber" who shall become a party hereto after the 1st day of July, 1917, shall on the 10th days of January, April, July, or October next occurring pay to the "company" those amounts which it would have been obliged to pay in accordance with the foregoing if it had been a "subscriber" on July 1, 1917.

Moneys paid into the treasury of the "company" pursuant to any provisions hereof shall not be or constitute or be deemed to be or constitute the assets, property, or profits of said "company," but shall be received and disbursed by it as the agent and attorney in fact of the "subscribers" in the manner and for the purposes herein mentioned.

IX. PAYMENTS BY THE "COMPANY."

Out of the moneys paid into the treasury of the "company" pursuant to the provisions hereof the following payments shall be made by the company on the 20th days of January, April, July, and October in each year, to wit:

(a) To the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation $135 on each airplane, with or without engine, with reference to which payments shall have been made in accordance with subdivisions (a) and (c) of Paragraph VIII hereof, during the preceding three calendar months, until United States patent No. 821393, issued May 22, 1906, shall have expired, or until the aggregate sum of $2,000,000 shall have been paid to the said Wright-Martin Airplane Corporation, when all payments to it hereunder shall cease, except as hereinafter provided.

(b) To the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation $40 on each airplane, with or without engine, with reference to which payments shall have been made in accordance with subdivisions (a) and (c) of Paragraph VIII hereof, during the preceding three calendar months, until such time as the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation shall have been paid in full as provided for in subdivision (a) of this paragraph, after which there shall be paid to the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation at the times herein mentioned the sum of $175 on each of said airplanes until the aggregate sum of $2,000,000 shall have been paid to it or until United States patent No. 1203550, issued October 31, 1916, shall have expired, when all payments to it hereunder shall cease, except as hereinafter provided.

(c) To each of the "subscribers" entitled thereto such amounts as may have been paid to the "company" with relation to the use of after acquired patents in accordance with subdivisions (c) and (e) of Paragraph VIII hereof.

(d) To each of the "subscribers" entitled thereto such amounts as may have been paid to the "company" on account of the use of specifications, drawings, and data, as provided in Paragraph VI and in subdivision (d) of Paragraph VIII hereof, but any royalty payment received from outside manufacturers shall be distributed as though received from "subscribers."

(e) To any "subscriber" who shall have granted licenses to others than "subscribers," as provided in Paragraph IV, the royalties received under such licenses which are not required for payments provided for in subdivisions (a), (b), and (c) of this paragraph.

Out of the balance of said moneys paid into the treasury of the "company" under this agreement, the "company" may retain and use sufficient to cover its operating expenses and to create such fund as, in the judgment of the board of directors of said "company," shall be necessary and proper for the further development of the airplane art and industry and the purchase of patents and rights for the benefit of the "subscribers" hereto.

If, after making the payments and reservation herein provided for, any surplus or balance remains out of the funds so paid into the treasury of the "company," the same shall be distributed by the "company" from time to time among those "subscribers" who have contributed to said moneys in proportion to their respective contributions under subdivisions (a) and (b) of Paragraph VIII other than those required for payments under subdivisions (a) and (b) of this Paragraph IX.

X. BREACH OF AGREEMENT.

In the event that any "subscriber" is claimed by the "company," or any other "subscriber" to be in default in the performance of any of its obligations hereunder, and such claimed default continues after 30 days' notice in writing, by the "company" or any "subscriber" hereto, to the "subscriber" claimed to be in default, then the board of arbitration, hereinafter provided for, shall determine whether there has been such specified default, and if such default is found to exist shall fix the time within which it must be repaired, and shall assess such damages and impose upon the "subscriber" in default such other requirements (including the forfeiture of its stock and license) as may seem to the said board of arbitration to be proper under the circumstances. Each "subscriber" covenants and agrees that it will pay such damages and comply with such requirements as may be specified by the said board of arbitration.

Nothing contained in this paragraph shall deprive the "company" of the power to make, execute, and deliver licenses under the patents or patent rights owned and controlled by any defaulting "subscriber" or to which the "subscriber" may be entitled at the time he ceases to be a stockholder or "subscriber," nor deprive other than defaulting "subscribers" of any right which they may have received to the use of the said patents or patent rights.

XI. WITHDRAWAL FROM AGREEMENT.

Any "subscriber" may withdraw from this agreement at any time after 10 years from the date hereof on giving to the "company" written notice of its election so to do and on fulfilling all of its obligations up to the date of such withdrawal. But no withdrawal shall relieve the other parties and other "subscribers" from their obligations to each other hereunder, nor deprive them of their rights acquired under the patents and patent rights owned or controlled by the withdrawing "subscriber" at the time of withdrawal, all of said patents and patent rights remaining under this agreement, but such withdrawing "subscriber" shall cease to have any rights under the patents of the other "subscribers" hereto, or any other right under this agreement, from and after such withdrawal.

XII. REPURCHASE OF STOCK.

In the event of the death of any person who is a stockholder in the "company," or in the event of the dissolution of any corporation or firm which is a stockholder therein, or in the event of the bankruptcy or insolvency of any such stockholders, or in the event of withdrawal under Paragraph XI hereof, the "company" shall have the right to purchase for the benefit of the other "subscribers" the stock held by such person, firm, or corporation at a sum not to exceed the distributive share or shares of such stockholder in the funds held by the "company," and the license or licenses issued to such stockholder shall be surrendered to the "company" and canceled.

XIII. ARBITRATION OF CLAIMS AND DISPUTES.

In case of any dispute or controversy between the "subscribers" hereto, or between the "subscribers" and the "company," or in case of a claim by a "subscriber" for special compensation for licenses under patents or rights hereafter acquired by it, or in case of breach of this agreement, the said dispute, controversy, claim, or breach shall, within 30 days after a "subscriber" or "subscribers" shall have given notice to the "company" or the "company" shall have given notice to the "subscribers" thereof, be referred to a board of disinterested arbitrators consisting of three persons for determination.

In the case of a claim for special compensation, one member of such board of arbitration shall be appointed by the board of directors of the "company," another by the "subscriber" making the claim, and the third by the other two arbitrators.

In the case of any dispute between the "company" and a "subscriber" or "subscribers," one member of the board of arbitration shall be appointed by the board of directors of the "company," another by the "subscriber" (or if more than one "subscriber" is involved in the same dispute, then by a majority of those so involved), and the third by the other two arbitrators.

In case of a breach of this agreement asserted by the "company" or a "subscriber" against another "subscriber," one member of the board of arbitration shall be appointed by the board of directors of the "company," another by the "subscriber" against whom the assertion of breach is made, and the third by the other two arbitrators.

If either the board of directors or the "subscribers" fail to appoint a member of the board of arbitration within the time specified, the other party or parties may appoint such member or fill such vacancy.

The decision of a majority of the members of said board upon all matters submitted to them for adjudication shall be final and binding upon all the parties hereto.

XIV. RELEASES TO "SUBSCRIBERS."

The "subscribers" hereby waive and release any and all claims which they or any of them may have had against each other for damages and profits on account of any infringement, or alleged infringement, prior to July 1, 1917, of any patent included within this instrument in the manufacture, sale, or use of airplanes.

XV. BINDING UPON PARTIES, CONTROLLED COMPANIES, LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES, ETC.

This agreement is binding upon the parties hereto and their several successors, legal representatives, and assigns, but shall insure to the benefit of only their several successors in business. Each "subscriber" agrees that all persons, firms, and corporations now or hereafter controlled by it, and engaged in the manufacture of airplanes, or owning or controlling United States airplane patents, shall be caused to execute this agreement.

XVI. EXECUTION OF AGREEMENT.

This agreement may be executed by the "subscribers" in any number of counterparts, but when so executed shall constitute but one and the same agreement, and shall be as binding and of the same force and effect as if all the "subscribers" had executed but one and the same instrument and as if all executions had been at the same time.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have executed this instrument as of the day and year first above written.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I did not hear all the Senator said. I did not understand fully what the Senator said concerning the part played in the enactment of this agreement by attorneys representing the two beneficiaries, the Curtiss Co. and the Wright-Martin Co.

Mr. THOMAS. If my information is correct, the attorney for the Wright-Martin Co. and the attorney for the Curtiss Co. were members of the subcommittee which after conferences with the advisory board, one of whom drew the contract to which my remarks were directed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Members of the subcommittee of the advisory board?

Mr. THOMAS. No; members of the subcommittee on which, I think, there was some representative of the advisory board.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator put into the RECORD the names of the individuals who were really responsible for the agreement?

Mr. THOMAS. I think the records which I have introduced do so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was correct in assuming that the two great beneficiaries of the agreement are the Curtiss Co., which received $2,000,000, and the Wright-Martin Co., which received $2,000,000, but I did not have clearly in my own mind the degree to which their representatives participated in advising the Government to make the agreement.

Mr. THOMAS. These companies are the principal beneficiaries of the agreement, although the monetary compensation has since been cut in half, so that each is to receive $1,000,000. But the tremendous value to them of this agreement is that their patents are made fundamental, and, of course, long before either of them expires this Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, which in my judgment is but another name for these two companies, will have acquired through the operation of their cross-licenses practically all the other inventions relating to aircraft.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can see how the two attorneys for these corporations participated in that agreement, but can the Senator state, so as to make it clear, who else participated and who represented the Government and the public interest which bound the United States in such an agreement?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the record to which I referred does not contain the names of all these gentlemen, I will procure that information at once. Before passing the document over to the reporter I will reexamine it and ascertain whether it contains a list of the committee preparing the contract.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I shall be obliged to object, as the Senate has agreed to consider another bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMERENE. What bill is that?

Mr. SHIELDS. The passport bill, regulating entry into and departure from the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. I had stepped out for a moment and was not aware of that fact. I was in hopes that I would be in the lead of the Senator from Tennessee. I withdraw the request under the circumstances.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MARTIN. I submit the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and ask that it be read and considered at this time.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 19, 20, 23, 45, 47, 48, 56, 57, 59, 74, 75, 78, and 88.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 40, 42, 43, 44, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 61, 62, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 71, 72, 73, 76, 77, 79, 80, 81, 82, 85, 86, 87, and 89, and agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JOHN M. EVANS,
WILLIAM H. STAFFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. As this is only a partial agreement and there still remain two amendments upon which the conferees have been unable to agree, I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia kindly state, in a few words, what the amendments are?

Mr. MARTIN. They are the amendments abolishing the Subtreasuries and with reference to the increase of salaries of clerks, including the Borland amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. MARTIN. We thought we did not have a right to recede on those matters, and the House conferees would not come to the position of the Senate, so the amendments remain in disagreement. I move that the Senate further insist upon the amendments still in dispute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia include in his motion a request for a further conference?

Mr. MARTIN. It is possible that the House might have a vote on the matter and agree with us on those amendments; so I thought I would forego making that motion until the matter came back from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, that the Senate further insist on its amendments in dispute.

The motion was agreed to.

ENTRY INTO AND DEPARTURE FROM THE UNITED STATES.

The Senate, as in committee of the whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10264) to prevent in time of war departure from or entry into the United States contrary to the public safety.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 2 of the bill by inserting after the word "President," in line 13, the words "and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President may authorize and prescribe," so that section 2, if amended, will read as follows:

SEC. 2. That after such proclamation as is provided for by the preceding section has been made and published and while said proclamation is in force it shall, except as otherwise provided by the President, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President may authorize and prescribe, be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to depart from or enter or to attempt to depart from or enter the United States unless he bears a valid passport.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have no objection to that amendment. On the contrary, I think it a proper one, and I really favored it in the committee when the bill was being considered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think I realize the necessity for some such legislation as is proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I can see also the great harm which may come to the people of both the United States and Canada unless the rules and regulations provided for in this amendment are so framed as to obviate the apparent difficulties which will be met. If I had been satisfied and the country had been satisfied with many of the regulations which have heretofore been made by the administration, which has been vested with discretionary power, I should look with less apprehension upon granting this power to the Executive. Yet, I repeat, that I see the necessity of the legislation. I have given it some thought, and I know of no way to clearly obviate the possible danger unless it be by making an exception in terms as to those countries which are allies of the United States in this struggle, and I can appreciate the difficulties attaching to such action.

I am informed by the State Department that such an exception carried in the statute would be a source of embarrassment and might involve our international relations with other countries which would be perhaps as serious as the difficulty which we are seeking to overcome. Regretting as I do that it is necessary to enact any such legislation, which may be abused and which we may have cause to regret if it shall be abused, nevertheless I feel that I can not consistently oppose the measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator that the State Department and the Labor Department have been cooperating with Canada, with Great Britain, and with our other allies, and mutually reciprocal arrangements have been entered into which possess more or less the form of regulations that are entirely satisfactory. I have had a number of conferences with representatives of the Labor Department having to do with the immigration and with the passport divisions of the State Department, and they stated that there are no difficulties whatever, particularly with Canada, and that there is no plan, if this bill shall be enacted into law, to disturb the relations that now exist between the United States and Canada; that there will be the same free intercourse between the people of the respective countries after this bill has been enacted into law as exists to-day under mutual arrangements which perhaps do not have the force of law.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am going to assume that that is true; yet I have the thought that, while the department dislikes to have Congress in terms except from the provisions of the law our relations with Canada, still that same condition will be encountered when the administration comes to frame the regulations, for if we are to have one regulation in relation to Canada and a different regulation in reference to Mexico, the same discrimination will be shown that would be practiced if we in terms except Canada from the operation of the law.

However, I myself do not know how to obviate the difficulty, and I do realize the necessity for the passage of some such legislation. I am therefore going to trust, as I have been obliged heretofore to trust, discretionary power in the Executive to deal with a situation which may become most serious if it is not properly handled. I hope that the man who prepares the regulations will be familiar with the great fact that the boundary between Canada and the United States is an imaginary line across which passes daily and hourly thousands of people in pursuance of the friendly necessary traffic of two great English-speaking nations, the unnecessary interruption of which would be most unfortunate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, my position is very much the same as that of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I think this proposed law ought to be confined to the present emergency and to the present war. If that were so, I could myself see no impropriety in distinctly excepting Canada in this proposed act. Our relations with Canada are different from what they are with Mexico. Mexico is a neutral, while we are fighting in association with Canada. If we accord to Canada treatment which we do not accord to Mexico, I do not see how Mexico can complain so long as we treat her the same as we treat every other neutral nation. Canada is not a neutral; she is, in a sense, our ally; she is fighting with us; her soldiers are on the same battle line as are ours. I therefore should like to see Canada excepted within the terms of this proposed act.

As the Senator from Michigan said, I can not see where there would be more embarrassment in our excepting Canada in the law than there will be if the State Department excepts it in their regulations, because they will have to do it or else they will disturb the relations between this country and Canada. They will have to make an exception in some way; they can not keep that exception under a bushel; it will have to be known. It will have to be known to the people of Canada and to the people of this country, and, of course, it will be known to the people of Mexico.

As I say, I should like to see the act amended so as to confine it to the present emergency. Then, I should like to see it amended so as to exempt Canada from its operations; though perhaps that is not possible in view of the attitude of the department.

I should like to know what the proposed regulations are. I understand that the regulations have already been prepared; I understand that the proclamation is ready. Well, those who prepared the proclamation and the regulations, I assume have prepared this bill. They do not want to see the bill amended, and they have their regulations prepared. So they insist upon the passage of the bill as they have prepared it. We have very little to say with reference to the framing of legislation here. I do not know whether they will confer with any of the Senators or Representatives from the States along the border who know the conditions before they promulgate the rules and regulations, if we authorize them to do it as provided in the bill as it is now framed. I think it would be wise if they would do so. The trouble is that the regulations to carry out the measures that we pass are usually framed by some individual in the department whose vision does not go beyond his own neighborhood or outside of the particular line of thought he has been following, and he does not see the broader aspects of the situation. The result is that the regulations, while prepared with the best of intentions, have the most disastrous results.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the Senator whether or not there is any difficulty now in the commercial and other intercourse between citizens on our side of the line and those on the Canadian side of the line?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; we have no restrictions.

Mr. KING. I wish to say to the Senator that there are regulations and restrictions now, which were promulgated by the State Department and the Department of Labor nearly a year ago without authority of law; that is to say, the exigency demanded some regulations, more particularly with respect to our southern border, and certain regulations were agreed upon in cooperation with the Canadian officials, which regulations are now in force. The purpose of the pending measure is merely to legalize, if I may be permitted that expression, the regulations which have been promulgated for many months.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have issued different regulations in reference to Canada from those they have issued with reference to Mexico.

Mr. KING. No; they are substantially the same regulations, although in regard to Canada a different interpretation is placed on the regulations and a different application is made of them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have prepared ambiguous regulations, and then have construed them one way as to one section and another way as to another section.

Mr. KING. I have the regulations here, and I do not think they are ambiguous. I know they have met with the approval of the Canadians, and similar regulations adopted by our friends across the border to the north have been approved by those representing our Government. There has been no difficulty whatever; they have worked smoothly, to use the expression of one of the persons having in charge the execution of these matters, and there is no purpose whatever to disturb the present methods by which intercourse between the two nations is effectuated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have not had very much trouble between this country and Canada; I have had some complaints, but I do not think they amounted to very much; and so I say our intercourse with Canada has been satisfactory. Of course, if nothing would be done under this measure that would interfere with existing relations, I should see no particular objection to it; but if it is not the intention to have any restrictive measures apply as between this country and Canada I can not see how there could be any objection to so providing in the law, except as this bill is now framed it applies not only to the present emergency but to all the future.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the provisions of this bill are so broad in principle and so flexible that they can be adapted by the President and those whom he will authorize to enforce them to any particular conditions. I have no doubt that different conditions will exist along the eastern part of the northern boundary line from those obtaining along the western part of the boundary line, for there are very great differences in the commerce, in the manner in which the country is settled, and in the transportation systems. There is a great deal of difference also in the southern boundary line at various places. This bill not only applies to these two boundary lines, as the Senator will remember, but to all vessels coming into the ports of the United States, as to which there will be some different regulations and conditions. From conversations with officers of the department in regard to the matter, I do not think the Senator need have any fear as to the very liberal character of the rules to be promulgated in order that they may not interfere unreasonably with intercourse between the two countries.

One reason why the rules can not be written into the law is that there is a constant change in conditions. As we know, already during this war conditions have changed; we can not anticipate what changes may yet occur, and it would be very difficult to prescribe rules to apply to the entire boundary on the north or the entire boundary on the south, or to all vessels coming into our ports. Therefore it was thought best to put the broad power in the hands of the President, to be exercised with all the restrictions and all the limitations as the circumstances, in his discretion, might require.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes, Mr. President, I know this measure is broad; it is just as broad as it can be; it amounts to the same thing as if we were to say to the President, "Do what you think best and proper whenever we are at war." My idea would be not to establish any regulation with reference to any part of the Canadian boundary or as to vessels and intercourse between this country and Canada, but simply to leave that entirely free.

Furthermore, we are asked to pass the bill upon assurances from those in the department that, of course, everything will work all right and everything will work smoothly. They do not anticipate that anything will go wrong; they are satisfied that they know how to take care of the situation. The only trouble that I have had heretofore with reference to matters of that kind is that, while they have acted with the very best of intentions and the very best of purposes, and from the highest of motives, they have made regulations that have not worked right, not because of the lack of good intentions, but because of the lack of knowledge of the conditions sought to be covered by their regulations. That is what I am afraid of in this case.

But, Mr. President, I shall not interfere with the passage of the measure. I will trust in their endeavor to acquaint themselves with the different conditions which will have to be met by these regulations; and I hope that they will adopt such regulations as will not injuriously affect intercourse along the northern border. It is a very serious matter not only for this country but for Canada, and I trust that they appreciate the importance of it and that they will be very careful to acquaint themselves with what they are going to effect by these rules and regulations; and if they have any doubt as to the conditions and as to the character of the business and the kind of rules that they should promulgate, I hope that they will feel justified in conferring with some of those who know as to the conditions. It ought not to be humiliating upon the part of some of the officers of the Government to confer with Senators and Representatives once in a while with reference to conditions in their States about which they are supposed to know something. So I hope that if these administrative officers have any doubt about the efficacy of the regulations which they are about to promulgate they will feel free to confer with those who are interested in the matter and who do know something about it. So, much as I would like to have the bill amended along the line I have indicated, and slight as I think the chances are that harm would come from amending the act in such a way, I shall not insist upon changing it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, possibly I might refrain from saying an additional word to what I said yesterday when this bill was under consideration. I have prepared an amendment providing that the act shall be in force during the continuance of the war and for six months after the consummation of peace, and also excepting in terms the Dominion of Canada from its provisions; but I shall not offer the amendment under the conditions existing.

I quite agree with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that it would be well in the matter of our relations with Canada if Members of both Houses of Congress who have a direct concern in the matter might be consulted. This measure is of very great moment to the people of New England, provided any essential change is to be made in the relations of that section of the country with the Dominion of Canada. I am gratified to be told that the regulations which the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has in his possession exempt the issuance of passports between this country and Canada. That is important.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. This morning I had an interview with representatives from the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor, also with Mr. Flournoy, of the State Department, and with Mr. Carr, who, as the Senator knows, has been in the State Department for many years.

Mr. GALLINGER. In charge of the Consular Service.

Mr. KING. Yes; in charge of the Consular Service—a very competent and a very superior public official.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. KING. If Canada were the only country involved, there would be no need of this legislation; but the Senator will see—and I do not care to make any invidious comparisons—that we have neighbors in other quarters that do not occupy the same relation to us that Canada does; and it is to meet conditions that arise there and arise elsewhere that legislation of this kind is required. But there is no purpose to disturb the present relations between this country and Canada or to impede in any way the intercourse between the two countries. Indeed, I am advised that unless new developments arise no change whatever will be made in the present modus operandi by which the intercourse between the two nations is secured.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the very industrious Senator from Utah has rendered a service in calling this matter to the attention of the officials he has named. It is important that we should have some definite information when a bill of this kind is presented to us for consideration and action.

I suggested yesterday—and I will take but a moment, perhaps, to repeat what I said—that New England is largely dependent upon Canada for labor in our factories and in our forests and in other industries that are carried on there. We have two or three great railroad lines running from New England to Canada, and traversing, indeed, the entire Dominion; and our business relations are very intimately connected with Canada.

I have felt for many years that so far as our economic laws are concerned Canada has the better of us. We have dealt very liberally with Canada in our statutes. I am not going to find fault with that now. That is a matter that will adjust itself in the future, if it is thought of sufficient consequence to be reconsidered. But my anxiety has been, and to some extent I have an anxious thought now, that nothing shall be done to interrupt the cordial and friendly relations of the two countries, because I know that if anything of the kind did occur it would be in the nature of a disaster to the section of the country that I represent.

Canada has been a liberal customer of the United States, always buying very much in excess of what we have bought from her, and perhaps in that respect we have had the advantage of Canada. But however that may be, the assurance which the Senator from Utah gives us, and which the Senator in charge of the bill gives us, satisfies me that we can do no better than to pass the bill as it is written; and I shall give my vote for it fully satisfied that what has been said to us about the purpose of the department, and which I feel sure will be the purpose of the President, will protect the interests that I in part represent and in which the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Washington are equally interested. That is all I care to say.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to say that he was satisfied with the bill as written. I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to section 2 much improves it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had the impression that that amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I also saw Mr. Flournoy, of the State Department, and he assured me, as he did the Senator from Utah, that our relations with Canada would not be disturbed by this bill, and he also explained to me that there were other reasons why they did not want the bill affirmatively to leave out Canada. He would not state to me just what those reasons were. I can not see any difference between excluding Canada in the regulations and excluding Canada in the bill. Perhaps the Senator from Utah can explain that matter to me. I have prepared an amendment on this question, and I was intending to introduce it unless I should be satisfied on that point.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know that I can explain it to the satisfaction of the Senator from Maine, or to the satisfaction of other Senators; but it does occur to me that it would not be wise or prudent legislation, in a general bill, to discriminate in favor of any one country. Mexico is our neighbor. Theoretically, at least, we are on terms of amity and peace with her. Her ambassador is here; our ambassador is in the City of Mexico. If we were to discriminate in this legislation by excluding one country from the operations of the bill, some other nation with which we are at peace might feel affronted and say that this Republic was favoring one nation at the expense of another.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will they not have the same feeling when they are excluded in the regulations?

Mr. KING. I do not think that would be the case, because, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, the regulations will be flexible. Different conditions are found upon the northern border than those which are found upon the southern border; and where officials are authorized to make regulations adapted to conditions that they have to meet, certainly other nations could not urge the same objection to the fact that those regulations differed that they could urge to a statute which upon its face discriminated against a nation with which we are at peace. Moreover, the statute to be effective must be general and contain no exceptions.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that different regulations can be made to apply to different facts and circumstances with respect to different nations, which of course can not be done in a statute. There must be some administrative discretion in the matter.

Another point is that we could not well except British subjects from this bill when it applies to citizens of the United States. In order to be effective, this bill must apply to everyone. We can not tell who comes into the United States in the guise of an American citizen, or of a French citizen, or of an English subject, and yet is a German spy. We must have either efficient, effective protection, or none at all; and therefore an exception as to British subjects, which is in substance an exception of the Canadian border, would make the bill absolutely abortive. That is the real reason for not making any exceptions, as I see it.

I believe, Mr. President, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask that the committee amendments be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 1, line 3, before the words "the United States," to strike out "Section 1. When" and insert "That when"; and in line 9, after the word "unlawful," to strike out "except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall authorize or prescribe," so as to make the clause read:

That when the United States is at war, if the President shall find that the public safety requires that restrictions and prohibitions in addition to those provided otherwise than by this act be imposed upon the departure of persons from and their entry into the United States, and shall make public proclamation thereof, it shall, until otherwise ordered by the President or Congress, be unlawful.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, to strike out "unless and until he shall have secured from such official or department as the President shall designate permission to depart or enter, as the case may be," and insert "except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe," so as to make the clause read:

(a) For any alien to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States, except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, at the end of line 13, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon; at the end of line 17, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon; at the end of line 21, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon; at the end of line 24, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon; and on page 3, at the end of line 4, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 10, before the word "such," to insert "That after," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That after such proclamation as is provided for by the preceding section has been made and published and while said proclamation is in force it shall, except as otherwise provided by the President, be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States unless he bears a valid passport

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 17, before the word "person," to strike out "Any" and insert "That any," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That any person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act, or of any order or proclamation of the President promulgated, or of any permit, rule, or regulation issued thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. KING, and Mr. NELSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have here a bill that is very urgent. It is called——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I shall insist upon my recognition. I will not give way for the bringing up of another bill at this time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that this is a matter of letting the signatures of the new bank notes that have been authorized to take up the $350,000,000 of silver that is to be retired to be lithographed instead of signed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, we have here a bill that relates to the housing of 450,000 people in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think there will be any debate on this bill. If it gives rise to any debate, I will withdraw it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, we had some experience with one of those banking bills the other day. I do not want to be discourteous about the matter, of course.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are different banking bills, and I found that the Senators were very jealous of the right to overdraw. They are not jealous of the bill that I am presenting to-day.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there was an understanding, I think—not a positive agreement, but an understanding—that the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads would permit me to take up and complete the consideration of this bill. I am hoping that there may not be much debate upon it, but I can not yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Ohio that the Chair recognized the Senator from Colorado, and it will be for the Senate to determine the question as to which bill shall be considered.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor first. I have been trying to get it several times this morning; but if the Presiding Officer recognized the Senator from Colorado, I yield, of course.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3900, a copy of which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read in full, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3900) to amend and reenact section 5172 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. I will say that while there was not a positive arrangement, I have been led to believe that the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads will yield to me for the consideration of the rent bill, and if that is the way he is feeling about it now I would certainly appreciate it. I do not think the Senator from Colorado ought to ask that the bill he is seeking to have considered shall displace the rent bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It can be passed in less time than we have taken to discuss it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Ohio may proceed with the rent bill, which he has in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that the rent bill is before the Senate?

Mr. POMERENE. It is not yet before the Senate, but I hope the Senator from Colorado will yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state, if the Senator will permit me, that if it takes more than five minutes to consider the bill I wish to have passed I shall withdraw it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have a very distinct recollection that the Senator made a similar promise when we had the Porto Rican bill before the Senate and that it lasted for several months.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There was a certain conspiracy on the Porto Rican bill that I could not control. It will not take any time to dispose of this bill. No one will make any objection to it. It merely permits a lithographic signature instead of a signature in writing in the case of the one and two dollar bills which have been authorized to be issued in lieu of the $350,000,000 of silver retired. It only affects that one thing.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. May I inquire what is before the Senate? I understand that the Post Office appropriation bill has been laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside.

Mr. POMERENE. May I also add that it was done to give me permission to call up the rent bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that was involved in the request of the Senator from Alabama. Unanimous consent was asked by the Senator from Alabama to lay aside the Post Office appropriation bill temporarily in order that the rent bill might be taken up. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

RENT ADMINISTRATOR FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. BECKHAM. I announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], is detained by illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the bill be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute, and read to the end of section 5, on page 12.

Mr. CALDER. Is it in order to offer an amendment at this time to the section just read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order to offer an amendment at this time pending the reading of the amendment.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the substitute, which is as follows:

That by reason of the existence of a state of war, it is essential to the national security and defense, and for the successful prosecution of the war, to establish governmental control and assure adequate regulation of real estate in the District of Columbia for and during the period hereinafter set forth, and the President, through the rent administrator, is authorized to make and promulgate such rules, regulations, and orders, not inconsistent herewith, as are essential effectively to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That the rent for real estate within the District of Columbia shall not be in excess of the following rates herein provided for:

(a) The rent, whether by the day, week, month, or year, at which real estate was let on October 1, 1917, or (b) if not rented on that date, the rent, whether by the day, week, month, or year, at which it was thus last let before that date, or (c) if real estate was not rented on or prior to October 1, 1917, then it may be rented for an amount equal to 7 per cent net on a valuation equal to the assessed valuation of said property for taxation plus 50 per cent thereof. Said rents above prescribed shall be the standard rents for said several classes of property, and prima facie shall be reasonable rents therefor.

SEC. 3. (a) That where the landlord or lessor incurs expenditures on the improvement or structural alteration of such real estate (not including expenditures for decoration or repairs), an increase of rent at the rate of not exceeding 7 per cent per annum on the amount so expended shall not be deemed to be an increase of rent for the purposes of this act.

(b) Any transfer to a tenant of any burden or liability previously borne by the landlord or lessor shall be treated as an alteration of rent, and where, as a result of such transfer, the terms on which such real estate is held are, on the whole, less favorable to the tenant than the previous terms, the rent shall be deemed to be increased, whether or not the sum periodically payable by way of rent charge is increased; and any increase of rent as a result of any transfer to a landlord or lessor of any burden or liability previously borne by the tenant, where, as the result of such transfer, the terms on which such real estate is held are, on the whole, more favorable to the tenant than the previous terms, shall be deemed not to be an increase of rent for the purposes of this act.

(c) Wherever any increase of rent is by this act permitted, no such increase shall be due or recoverable until 30 days after the landlord or lessor has served upon the tenant a notice in writing of his intention to make said increase, accompanied by (1) a statement of the improvements or alterations effected and their cost, where the increase is on account of such expenditures; or (2) a statement showing particulars of the increased amount charged, where the increase of rent is on account of such increase in rates.

The landlord or lessor and lessee may make contracts or leases for daily, weekly, monthly, or yearly rental of real estate so as to net the landlord or lessor not exceeding 7 per cent per annum for the use or occupancy thereof on the value of the property as fixed by its assessment for taxation. Such value for the purposes of this act shall be one and one-half times said assessment so long as the present basis for taxation continues, but if such basis is changed the value for the purposes of this act shall be changed accordingly, so that the rent shall in no case exceed 7 per cent per annum on the actual value of the property.

SEC. 4. That no person shall in consideration of a grant, renewal, or continuance of any contract or lease require or receive the payment of any fee, fine, premium, bonus, or other consideration in addition to the rental stipulated in said grant, renewal, or continuance.

SEC. 5. That no judicial order for the recovery of possession of any real estate now or hereafter held or acquired by oral or written lease, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, and all leases thereof shall continue so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate, or as it may be modified under the provisions of this act, and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, except on the ground that the tenant has failed to take reasonable care of the premises, or has committed waste, or has been guilty of conduct which is a nuisance or amounts to a disturbance of the peace of adjoining or neighboring occupiers or a violation of law, or that the premises are reasonably required by a landlord for the occupation by himself or his family while in the employ of or officially connected with the Government; and where such order has been made but not executed before the passage of this act, the court by which the order was made may, if it is of the opinion that the order would not have been made if this act had been in operation at the date of the making of the order, rescind or modify the order in such manner as the court may deem proper for the purpose of giving effect to this act: Provided, That any provision in any oral or written lease that the same shall be determined or forfeited if the premises shall be sold is hereby declared to be void while this act shall be in force, and every purchaser shall take the conveyance of any premises subject to the rights of all tenants in possession thereof, under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That if the rent of real estate as herein permitted shall not equal 7 per cent per annum net on the valuation thereof as herein determined, then upon application by the landlord it may be increased by the Rent Administrator so as not to exceed said amount.

In fixing rents of real estate there shall be taken into account the taxes and assessments thereon, the cost of reasonable repairs and maintenance, and of light, heat, water, and elevator and other service where furnished, as well as a proper allowance for depreciation and nonoccupancy. Rents in excess of the rates herein provided are hereby declared to be against public policy and void, and if accrued or paid after the passage of this act such excess may be recovered by the lessee, his assigns or legal representatives if action shall be begun therefor within six months after the expiration of his tenure.

In the case of hotels or apartment houses, or of rooms or apartments in hotels or apartment houses, which have not been rented to tenants or guests on or before October 1, 1917, the rates shall be fixed by the Rent Administrator at the same prices, as nearly as may be, as are permitted to be charged for similar accommodations by hotels or apartment houses of the same character similarly situated in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That when the real estate is rented furnished, the Rent Administrator shall authorize a fair and reasonable rental of said real estate, including furniture, but such rent shall not be in excess of double the amount that the administrator would be required to fix for said real estate if unfurnished on all leases in existence at the time this act shall take effect. On all real estate rented furnished after this act shall take effect such rent shall not be more than 50 per cent in excess of the amount that the Rent Administrator would be required to fix upon such real estate if unfurnished and shall be subject to the approval of the Rent Administrator.

In cases where a joint charge is made for the use of real estate, furnished or unfurnished, and for food, meals, or board, the Rent Administrator shall ascertain what part of said joint charge should properly be made for the use of said real estate, and it shall not be in excess of the rates herein authorized. In no case shall the furnishing of food to lessee or lessees be included in the lease, but such agreements shall be separate and apart from any agreement for the rent of real estate.

SEC. 8. That landlords and managers of hotels, apartment houses, and boarding houses and others letting rooms or apartments, furnished or unfurnished, shall keep conspicuously posted in said hotels, apartment houses and boarding houses, rooms or apartments, cards to be furnished by the Rent Administrator showing the rates authorized or approved by the Rent Administrator for the said rooms or apartments, and said cards shall recite that said rates are so authorized or approved by the Rent Administrator.

SEC. 9. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a rent administrator, who shall be a resident of the District of Columbia and a citizen of the United States. He shall have full power and authority, and it shall be his duty, under the direction of the President, and subject to the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations herein authorized, to fix, revise, and change, upon his own motion or upon the application of any person or party in interest, including mortgagees, the amount of rent which can be lawfully charged and received for the use and occupancy of any real estate in the District of Columbia now or hereafter to be rented, leased, sublet, transferred by assignment of lease or contract, or with respect to which a tenancy may be created or extended, or by any new lease or contract. Any and all orders or findings of the rent administrator fixing or revising and changing rents shall be final and shall take effect as of the date of the application filed with the rent administrator: Provided, That any person or party in interest, including mortgagees, may, within five days, prosecute an appeal from any such orders or findings of the administrator to the real estate board of equalization and review of the District of Columbia, which, for the purposes of this act, is hereby created the board of rent appeals, under and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be made by the President governing such appeals, and said board is hereby authorized to confirm or modify the said orders and findings of the rent administrator in any way the facts may justify not inconsistent with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations governing appeals herein provided for. The orders and findings of the rent administrator shall continue in full force and effect until such appeal shall be decided by the board of rent appeals, which decision shall be final.

Before fixing, revising, or changing the amount of rent which can be lawfully charged and received for the use and occupancy of any real estate five days' notice of the motion or application made for that purpose shall be served personally upon the parties in interest, or by leaving copies of said notice at their usual place of residence within the District, and if residing out of the District, by mailing a copy of said notice by registered letter to the person receiving the rent at his last known place of business, and if his place of business be not known, then by posting a copy of said notice in the office of the rent administrator.

SEC. 10. That all persons letting real estate shall be required to keep books of account, open at all times to the inspection of the rent administrator or his authorized agents, showing the rents charged and paid, including the names of the tenants or renters, and also an itemized statement of the taxes and assessments thereon, the cost of reasonable repairs and maintenance, insurance, light, heat, water, and elevator, or other service, where furnished, as well as a proper allowance for depreciation or nonoccupancy. No item shall be considered by the rent administrator in fixing the rent of property which does not appear in such account.

SEC. 11. That the said rent administrator and the board of rent appeals are hereby empowered to summon witnesses and require the production of books, papers, and accounts, and to administer oaths and affirmations to witnesses so summoned, and take testimony respecting the matters covered by this act.

SEC. 12. That any person who shall knowingly receive rents on real estate in excess of those permitted by the terms of this act or who shall knowingly by any sale or transfer or by any act or subterfuge evade or attempt to evade its provisions shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine not exceeding $1,000 or to imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

SEC. 13. That any house or building not occupied by the owner or a tenant for a period of three months immediately preceding the passage of this act, or for a period of five months after the passage of this act, may be commandeered by the President of the United States for the period of the war and six months thereafter, and used for war or Government purposes, the rentals and conditions of tenancy to be fixed by the rent administrator in his discretion.

SEC. 14. That the rent administrator shall receive a salary of $4,000 per year, and he is authorized to employ one assistant at a salary not to exceed $2,500 per year; two field men at salaries not to exceed $1,800 per year each; and two clerks or stenographers at salaries not to exceed $1,200 per year each, provided said assistants and clerks shall be necessary for the proper administration of his office.

SEC. 15. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act for any reason shall be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

SEC. 16. (a) That the term "real estate" as herein used shall be construed to include lands, buildings, parts of buildings, houses, dwellings, apartments, rooms, or suites of rooms, and every improvement and structure whatsoever, and every portion and part thereof situated and being in the District of Columbia, and any and all estates or rights therein or thereto.

(b) The expressions "landlord," "lessor," or "tenant" include any person from time to time deriving title under the original landlord, lessor, or tenant.

(c) The words "person" or "party" when used in this act shall be construed to include individuals, partnerships, joint-stock companies, associations, corporations, societies, or bodies corporate.

(d) The words importing the masculine gender shall be held to include other genders, and the words importing the singular number shall include the plural number, or vice versa.

SEC. 17. That this act shall remain in force during the present war, and for one year after a treaty of peace shall have been concluded and proclamation thereof shall have been made by the President of the United States.

SEC. 18. That to relieve, as far as possible, the congestion in the District of Columbia because of war activities, any commission, bureau, or any subordinate parts thereof, or other governmental agencies, not reasonably necessary to be located or continued within the District of Columbia shall be removed and transferred by order of the President to such convenient place as he may designate.

SEC. 19. That in order to carry out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, one half of said sum to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, those Senators who have read the pending bill as reported by the committee will see that it differs materially from the bill which was passed by the House. I think very great credit is due to the chairman of the District Committee in the House and his colleagues on the committee for the time and attention they have given to this subject, and while the District Committee of the Senate was not able to give its approval to the plan which was devised by the House committee we do agree with them entirely in this, that the conditions in the District here are so serious that it would be a public calamity to permit this Congress to adjourn without having some radical legislation upon the subject regulating the rates of rentals.

The bill as passed by the House took as its standard for the determination of rents the rental rates as they existed during the year ending September 30, 1916, and then it was sought to place a tax upon all rents which might be collected by the landlord class over and above the rates for that year plus an increase of 10 per cent. In the hearings before the District Committee I think we were all persuaded that the rates for materials used in building and in repairs as well as the rates of wages for the working classes and attendants generally had increased from 75 to 85 per cent. I think Senators will be able to see that with a permitted increase of 10 per cent gross in the amount of rentals over and above the year 1916 and an increase of from 75 to 85 per cent in the cost of labor and materials there would be very little if in fact there would be any margin for the owner of real estate. Of course, I am quite sure that the Members of the Senate as well as the House desire to approach this subject in a spirit of entire fairness, both to the landlord class and to the tenant class.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator right here enlighten us concerning the reason why we could not have adopted 1916 as the basis for those buildings that were already in existence and a different basis for those which have been built since at a greatly increased cost?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is a question which would naturally occur to anybody who was investigating the subject. There may be many things said for the use of that year as the standard, except this, that at that time there were a very large number of vacant buildings in the District. The number was variously estimated at from 4,000 to 10,000. I think it may be properly said that at that time the District was overbuilt; that is, there were more buildings here than were necessary for the proper housing of the people. Again, a good many people, as we were informed, had left the District for the purpose of securing employment in the armories and navy yards of the country. Taking into consideration the fact that there were so many vacant rooms and vacant buildings at that time we thought to use that year as a standard would perhaps not be quite fair.

Again, I think that I express the opinion of the members of the District of Columbia Committee generally when I say that the abnormal increases in rent in the District have substantially all occurred since October 1, 1917. As the Senator, because of his long official residence here in the District, is no doubt aware, the rent year in the District begins as of October 1 each year. So we thought that, generally speaking, the rates of rental on October 1, 1917, might not be unfair if used as a prima facie standard. If the Senator has observed the reading of the bill, as no doubt he has, he will find that, while we have what might be called a triple standard here, the rates therein prescribed are only prima facie reasonable; in other words, we have three classes: First, those properties which were rented as of October 1, 1917; second, those properties which were not rented at that time, but which had been theretofore rented; and, third, those properties which have been rented since October 1, 1917.

I may say that in the course of the hearings and our deliberations upon the subject, necessarily we were troubled in seeking to determine what would be a fair rate of rental.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, the committee necessarily had the means of obtaining the truth in regard to these rentals and when they became excessive, which I have not; but I am certain that as early as May and June of last year the complaint was very general throughout the city by those coming here at that time that excessive charges were then being made.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, I have no doubt that the Senator from North Dakota has heard of instances of that kind, but my belief is that, while there were, perhaps, too many such cases, yet they were comparatively few when the large number of lettings in the District are taken into consideration.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think that generally in May and June, 1917, there were enormous numbers of residences and apartments in this city for rent that were not rented, and that there was not an overdemand at that time, but that very shortly afterwards, in July and August, there was.

Mr. POMERENE. There were then a good many demands. I think that is a fair statement of the situation. At the same time, I have no doubt of the truth of the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to the effect that there were certain overcharges.

Mr. President, one bill was presented for the consideration of the committee which left the determination of the rate of rent absolutely to the discretion of the rent administrator. We did not feel that that was sound. We felt that Congress itself should prescribe certain landmarks, which would be regarded as fundamental, and that within those limits, of course, we should have to give the rent administrator a certain amount of discretion.

One of the questions that came before us was as to what limitation should be placed upon these rentals. Certain real estate agents and brokers who appeared before us brought one draft of a bill after we had had some conferences, to the effect that we should make a minimum and a maximum rate of net return, the minimum being 7 per cent and the maximum being 12 per cent. We have provided in this bill, in the determination of the amount of rent, for taking care of repairs, the cost of maintenance, the cost of light, the cost of heat, the cost of water, the cost of elevator, and of other personal service where such other personal service is rendered. We also allow for a proper charge for depreciation and nonoccupancy. I think that all Senators will recognize that those terms are somewhat flexible. Their proper administration must, of course, be left to the authorities provided in the bill.

I think I ought to say, in view of some statements which have been made in the public press, a word on the subject of the valuation which is used as the basis of this return. I find that some citizens seem to think that we allow not only for a net rental of 7 per cent on the actual valuation of the property, but that we have sought to add 50 per cent to that actual valuation. That is not correct. We have adopted the plan which is designated in this bill for this reason: Every two years in the District the real estate is reappraised. When that reappraisal is made the assessors seek to find the actual market value of the property. Then, when they make out their tax duplicates, the rule which they prescribed for themselves and which has been followed here in the District for a number of years, as I am informed, is that these properties shall be placed upon the tax duplicates at two-thirds of their actual valuation as they have ascertained it while making the appraisement. As a matter of fact, however, in practice, instead of using this 66⅔ per cent as a valuation to be placed upon the tax duplicates, they have used 70 per cent. So, assuming that all of the properties in the District are in fact placed upon the statute books at 70 per cent of their actual valuation, this would allow a net return of 7 per cent on $105 for every $100 of actual valuation. I think Senators will agree that it is next to impossible to get down to a mathematical nicety in defining rules of this character.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he has seen the statement of a Member of Congress to the effect that the assessed valuation here is 100 per cent of the actual market value of the property?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, I have seen some statements which would indicate that, but that is entirely wrong. We had before us Mr. Richards, who is the tax assessor, and a number of Senators on the committee now have served for years and have been familiar with the matter. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] recently served upon a committee that made a very thorough investigation into the valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not questioning the Senator's statement, he knows far more upon the subject than do I, but the statements to which I have called attention, and similar statements, are doubtless the basis of the impression that has pretty widely obtained that the assessed value of property here in the District and the actual value are identical.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that if the Senator will make inquiry about it he will find that that is wrong information.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's assertion is all that I want.

Mr. POMERENE. That is as I believe it, and when I make that statement I think that I express the views of the members of the committee generally.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire, if I may, to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. Of course, the actual assessed valuation of the property in the District would be entirely immaterial if all property were equally and fairly assessed, but I should like to know whether or not it is a fact that in arriving at the actual market value it has been done in the past with reasonable accuracy or has the market value which has been fixed really been below the actual value of the property?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think I can say, as the result of all the information we have had on the subject, that when this valuation was made two years ago—the last valuation—those who later inquired into the subject—and when I refer to them I mean a committee, it was a joint committee of the Senate and the other House, as I recall—were very agreeably surprised to find how accurate this appraisement had been. There is, however, no complete record of that appraisal. The only complete record they have is the record of valuations as entered upon the tax duplicates.

Mr. KELLOGG. And that is 70 per cent of what they determined as the actual valuation of the property?

Mr. POMERENE. Seventy per cent of such valuation, as I understand.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suppose, of course, the Senator from Ohio is aware that while in many States the law requires property to be assessed at its full value, the practice is entirely different?

Mr. POMERENE. I am quite aware of that fact.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio permit an interruption?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In answer to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], I think it should be stated that Mr. Richards, the assessor, stated to the committee that he had informed himself regarding all of the sales of real estate throughout the city during the last two years, and that upon an average the actual sales of property had not been quite as high as had been the appraisals.

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator from Vermont for stating that fact. I now recall it since he has stated it. I may say also that Mr. Richards has, as his corps of assistants, six gentlemen, five of whom have been in the service of his department for a good many years, and all of them, I am told, are very well equipped for the service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio permit me an interruption?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Vermont exactly what he meant by stating that the sales had not been as high as had been the appraisals? Appraisals by whom? By the tax assessors of the value they placed on the property?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes. I will say, in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire, the statement, as I understood it, was this: Property is appraised for the purposes of taxation substantially at two-thirds of what the appraisers deem to be its real value, and its real value is to be determined, as in the provisions of this bill, by the appraised valuation for purposes of taxation, adding 50 per cent to that. Now, taking the sum of appraised valuation and the 50 per cent added, you have what they call the "true valuation of the property." The statement was that the sales during the last two years had not brought prices quite so high as the real value which had been ascertained in that way.

Mr. GALLINGER. What I wanted to get at was the real value. There has been left an impression in my mind that it was the assessed valuation at the reduced rate.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No; the real value of the property.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think that the members of the committee were delighted to know with what accuracy this valuation work had been done here in the past in this city. At the present time there is a new valuation being made for this particular year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is fully justified in giving great credit to the board of assessors; they are experienced and intelligent men——

Mr. POMERENE. They are.

Mr. GALLINGER. And yet here, as everywhere else, I apprehend, there have been assessments made wide of the mark. I do not know how it has been during the last two years, but I do know that a friend of mine was offered a piece of property in the city of Washington three years ago for $9,000 and that when he went to the books of the District he found it was assessed at $14,000. That I know; so that in that particular case they made a great mistake.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no doubt that many inaccuracies may be found; but we think that we have made this proposed law so flexible that, if any injustice is done to the property owner, he can go before the assessors and have the valuation increased, although, of course, that would increase it for the purposes of taxation as well. On the other hand, if the tenants are of the opinion that they are paying too much rental, or if the rent administrator himself shall be of that opinion after he shall have received information upon the subject, they have a right to have a resurvey of the rentals so far as those properties are concerned. So I think in that respect the bill will be found very fair, considering these abnormal times.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will ask him a question.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had very little time to analyze the bill, and I think in regard to the provision to which I am about to allude, it has been corrected from the draft as it is before me. I noticed in one bill that provision was made that the rent administrator could reassess the property.

Mr. POMERENE. That was changed afterwards, and I am glad to say, again, that we made that change after a conference with the real estate assessor here in the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was a very dangerous provision, it seemed to me, because it would disrupt the work of the board of assessors.

Mr. POMERENE. It would; and, while I, perhaps, may have been responsible for the first suggestion, I saw that it would be a serious mistake to interfere with the work of the assessor's office.

Mr. President, just a word as to the necessity for this legislation. I do not think there is any difference of opinion among the members of the committee on that subject; and, at the same time, I believe that every member of that committee had a feeling of regret that it was necessary to take up legislation of this character; but there are literally thousands of people in this District who have been mentally distressed because of movements on the part of their landlords to dispossess them or to increase exorbitantly their rentals.

To illustrate: The rent year begins October 1. As a rule, the landlords during the month of September preceding ask for renewals of leases, a perfectly proper and reasonable practice; but this year they began some time ago to serve notices upon the tenants in a number of the large apartment houses, asking the tenants to renew their leases for the year beginning October 1, 1918, at rates of rental 50 per cent and more in excess of the present rates.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Could the Senator state what apartment houses those were?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, the Decatur was one of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not a very large one.

Mr. POMERENE. No; it is not one of the larger ones.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is an insignificant one.

Mr. POMERENE. The Cordova is another, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] suggests, and the Alabama is another. Letters have come to us showing that similar notices were served upon all tenants in rows of houses owned by one man.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt, if the Senator will permit me, that there are a good many cases of that kind, and yet I think perhaps the Senator went a little too far in saying that the large apartment houses, as a rule, have done that thing. I live in an apartment house, as does the Senator, and I have had no such notice, and I apprehend the Senator has not.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not.

Mr. GALLINGER. And yet we live in two of the largest apartment houses in the city.

Mr. POMERENE. Perhaps I stated the fact too broadly; but I will say, without fear of successful contradiction, that there are entirely too many of them in which that practice is being followed. These rents, of course, were to be largely increased. Last fall there were substantial increases in some of them, not so excessive as they are now and not so excessive as it is believed they will be if the Congress does not do something to grant this relief.

All sorts of excuses have been suggested for dispossessing tenants.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to add a statement?

Mr. POMERENE. I will be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think, on account of the inquiry made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I should make a statement. I know of a street on the east side of this city, north of Lincoln Park, where the houses are almost wholly occupied by Government employees. My attention has been called to a block of 12 houses, and I have seen a letter, dated on the 25th day of April, from the owners of the houses giving notice to the tenants to quit in 30 days from May 1. On the 26th day of April another notice came from the owners, under the letter heading of a real estate firm in the city, notifying the tenants that the control of those houses had been placed in the hands of that real estate firm, as of date of April 26. I have in my hand here the Washington Post of Thursday, May 2, and in that issue appears an advertisement containing a picture of the houses in that block, or the houses at one end of the block, headed:

Kennedy-built homes north of Lincoln Park. Five sold; seven left.

In six days five of the dwellings in that block had been sold. Those houses were occupied almost wholly by Government employees, with their wives and their children—children in almost every instance—who had been living there from three to seven years; but they happened to be in there without written leases, paying their rent monthly.

There is an actual case to which I had my attention called. I am informed that on that same street other owners of real estate have taken the same course, so that there is hardly a house on either side of it where the occupants have not been served with notice to quit because the owners desired to sell the property. If that is true on one street of the city, of course it must be true on many other streets; and many other instances have come to my attention. I simply wanted to add that to what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has said in regard to the need of legislation on this subject.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator for his contribution on that subject; and I may say, as indicating the extent to which these complaints are being made, that a captain in the War Department, who has been put there specially in charge of the subject of the housing of the Government employees here in the District, told me that during one week he had over 1,000 complaints of this kind. Landlords determined to put the tenants out or exact a very great increase in rent.

I happen to have here before me—I am not going to put it into the RECORD—a letter from a lieutenant commander in the Navy whose family has been in one of these apartment houses for several years, who had an increase in his rental last year of from 15 to 25 per cent. He would have expected to renew his lease during the month of September, but he is now served with notice that he must call at the office and renew his lease on or before May 10 at an increased rental of 33⅓ per cent over the increase of last year. I can imagine the frame of mind that one of our officers is in when he is going "over there" to render service to his country, to have somebody here in the very Capital of the Nation threatening to oust his little family while he may be away. That is the situation, and it is a very serious situation.

Mr. President, as to the rates of rental, I think I fairly state the subject as a fact, when I say that in the average industrial centers a gross rental of from probably 8 to 10 per cent is the prevailing rate, and a net return of 6 per cent on the average property is a fair rental. The committee was advised by the real estate assessor that here in the District there were about 200 first-class apartment houses, and that the average net rental on these 200 houses ranges between 6 and 7 per cent. There are probably between 900 and 1,000 apartment houses here all told. I mean by that all classes of such houses in the District, and nearly all of the tenants are occupying the premises on monthly or yearly leases. I can imagine what would happen when October 1 rolls around if Congress were to adjourn without doing anything on this subject.

Mr. WEEKS and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield first to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am quite in sympathy with most of the purposes of this bill, but it occurs to me that the rental is not sufficient. Certainly it ought to be desirable to increase the building of houses in Washington rather than to destroy activity in that direction. I do not know anyone under present conditions who would undertake the building of new houses for rental purposes on a gross possibility of 7 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, allow me to correct the Senator. Under this bill the net rental which may be received is 7 per cent.

Mr. WEEKS. After taking out taxes?

Mr. POMERENE. Net; after taking out all taxes, all assessments, all services in the nature of water, heat, light, elevator service, cost of maintenance, and a reasonable allowance for depreciation and nonoccupancy.

Mr. WEEKS. I have not read the bill in that way, but I do not think I will vary my statement even on that basis. I do not think it would be prudent to build houses on that basis with that as a maximum possibility. It seems to me that the amount should be increased somewhat.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that there is perhaps room for an honest difference of opinion upon that subject; but in all of the large apartment houses and the business blocks of these larger cities a net rental of 4 per cent is what is usually expected. I have gone through a good many statements made by life insurance companies and reports from them as to the rentals, and so forth, and I think I am not very much out of the way. I think, however, that is too small; and we thought that when we provided a net rental of 7 per cent we were doing reasonably well.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not wish to follow up this proposition particularly; but let me ask the Senator himself if he had money to invest if he would invest it in real estate on that kind of a basis? He would be wiser to buy liberty bonds on a 4¼ per cent basis.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, during an international crisis like this, if at the end of the war I had as much as I had at the beginning of the war, I would get down on my knees and thank my God.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It appeared in the evidence taken by the committee, in the testimony of Mr. Fairfax, the chairman of the real estate association of this city, that he deemed from 7 to 8 per cent a fair return on the properties they represented, after making these deductions.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I feel sure that we would like to have the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, whom we all recognize as an authority on questions of business, as to what, in his judgment, would be a fair net for rental return?

Mr. WEEKS. I should make the return 8 per cent, Mr. President, if I had the option.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean by that a net return of 8 per cent?

Mr. WEEKS. A net return, as to which that should be the maximum.

Mr. POMERENE. Then the Senator is only 1 per cent in excess of the rate provided for in the bill; and I recognize the fact that there are certain flexible elements that may be taken into consideration under this bill. One is that of depreciation. Of course I think we would all agree that what might be a fair charge for depreciation on a first-class apartment house that was in a perfect state of repair might be one thing, and a proper amount of depreciation charge for a building that was in a bad state of repair might be another thing; and I believe that good business judgment will be exercised by the rent administrator or the board of rent appeals when that question comes up.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that this law, when this bill becomes a law, will last for a year after the war. Presumably there will be a great falling off in the demand for accommodations in Washington as soon as the war is over, and that will make a material difference in the income which will be obtained from buildings in this city in the next year.

Mr. POMERENE. There may be some truth in that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only thought it would be well to call attention to a statement that has been made regarding the effect of this bill by several Senators who spoke the other day on the joint resolution which was then under consideration, and the Senator from Massachusetts referred to it in respect to this bill. The statement is that it will interfere with building operations; and almost in the same breath the same Senator, or some other Senator sitting beside him, says that there are no building operations going on now, and that no building operations can go on while the Government is taking to itself all the steel beams and plates and all the output of all the steel mills, and that practically people can not get building material. I think that is the condition. At present there is no building going on, except the completion of work which has been under way or contracted for; and in my humble judgment there will be none, except by the Government, during the period of the war.

Mr. POMERENE. May I add also in that connection that I assume that it prevails now, but, at any rate, in the past there has been an embargo upon the shipment of building material, unless it were shown to be absolutely necessary for the purposes of housing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. A moment ago, if I understood the Senator correctly, he suggested that the officials of the District of Columbia—the board of assessors, I presume—had suggested to the committee that a net return of 6 or 7 per cent would be a fair return.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I did not state it in that way, if the Senator please. What I stated was that their investigations showed that in the past there had been an average net earning, on the 200 best-class apartment houses, of between 6 and 7 per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not understand the Senator quite correctly then. I was about to ask whether they took into account the nonoccupancy of a portion of these apartments, or the nonoccupancy of residences. I recall a time—I think about three years ago—when I was told by members of the police force of the District of Columbia that there were over 9,000 vacant houses in the District of Columbia, and they remained vacant for a long time. They did not get any net return during that period. Of course, during that time also there were many vacant apartments in the apartment houses and vacant rooms in the hotels. Of course, if they figured it out and found the actual income, no fault could be found with that; but I was wondering whether or not that was done.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that one of the objections to taking the year 1916 as the standard was the fact that there were so many vacant properties here in the District, and that that number had been variously estimated at from 4,000 to 10,000.

I may say, too, that one of the leading contractors and builders here in the city, who was before us, in discussing this very subject, said that he had notified his tenants that he would expect to make an increase in his rental charges of 50 cents per room per month, and that he believed that because of the fact that all of his rooms, or nearly all of his rooms, were rented, with this additional return, plus the increase, he would be able to take care of most of the increases in the cost of material and labor and of the increased cost of coal.

Mr. President, I think that all Senators who have studied this question must realize that we can not make a hard-and-fast rule which is going to apply with equal force to every piece of property of the various kinds that there are here in the District, and for that reason it is necessary to have a rent administrator, who can adjust little differences as they may come up.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on that point, if the Senator will permit me, what about the other municipalities? Are there rent administrators anywhere else? I do not know. I ask for information.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I know of no rent administrator in this country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, really, this is a novel idea?

Mr. POMERENE. It is not entirely novel. The basic plan of this bill has been taken from the legislation of the British Parliament and the legislation of New South Wales and of New Zealand. If the Senator is interested in that subject, he will find the statutes of those various countries in the second part of the hearings before the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on that point I was about to ask the Senator a moment ago whether the hearings held by the Senate committee have been printed.

Mr. POMERENE. They have been printed; yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In view of the discussion that has been going on, I thought I ought to call the Senator's attention to the testimony of Mr. Bates Warren as to what he thought the increases ought to be over the rates of October 1, 1917.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. Bates Warren, as everybody knows, is probably the largest owner of apartment houses in the city, and owns the very finest ones, as well as some of the other ones. He was asked this question by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]:

> As a result of your conferences with these men, are you able to state in a general way what increase would be regarded as reasonable to be made on October 1, 1918, all things considered?
> Mr. WARREN. By taking the property that I just referred to as being property where service was given, I would have to state one reasonable figure. Taking the bare property where no service is given, I would have to state another reasonable figure.

He had been describing the elegant apartment houses, where they have all the modern improvements, elevator service, heat, light, bell boys, and everything of that kind, where the service was complete, as well as the other class of apartments, where there were no elevators. Then he continued:

> Senator POMERENE. Give us those figures.
> Mr. WARREN. It should not be less than 20 per cent in any event, in my opinion; about 25 per cent in the class of property where elevator service is given.
>
> Senator POMERENE. Twenty per cent in other properties where there is no such service?
> Mr. WARREN. I should say 15 per cent. Of course this is mere guesswork, more or less.

I call attention to that because of the exorbitant demands that are being made to-day all over the city. I call attention to the testimony of the man who is more interested in real estate than any other man in the city, and I call attention also to his opinion that in no case is more than 25 per cent advance in rents required to satisfy them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it will occur to Senators also that you can not apply the same rule to furnished property that you apply to unfurnished property, and so we have fixed a limit so far as the furnished property is concerned. The testimony before our committee indicated, as well as statements that were made informally, that it was a general rule in hotels that the rent of a furnished room ought to be 100 per cent more than the rent for the unfurnished room, and we have made that the maximum, but we have provided that the rent for furnished rooms as well as the rent for unfurnished rooms should be subject to the final approval of the rent administrator.

But we found another evil prevailing in the District. A good many of the landlords who heretofore have been renting their rooms and apartments unfurnished have decided that they would oust the present tenants and furnish these rooms, so as to get the increased rentals. Of course, there ought to be an increased rental for a furnished room over and above that of an unfurnished room; but we have made the maximum rental which may be charged for a furnished apartment or room which is hereafter furnished 50 per cent over and above the rental which would be allowed for the apartment or room unfurnished.

Of course, there must be a good deal of difference in the views of different practical men as to what might be a reasonable rate or perhaps a reasonable return, and we decided that we would not trust this administration entirely to a rent administrator, but that we would provide for a board of rent appeals, and an appeal can be taken from this rent administrator to the board of rent appeals. We provided that the present board in this District known as the Real Estate Board of Equalization and Review of the District should constitute this board of rent appeals. It is composed of the real-estate assessor and six assistants, four of whom are employed for the valuation and assessment of real estate and two of them for the valuation and assessment of personal property. All of these six men save one have been in the employ of the city and devoting their time and attention to this class of work for years, and we were told also that the sixth one was a very capable man. We hardly knew how we could get any board of review that would probably serve more faithfully and more justly the people of the District than this board.

I think that is all I care to say on the subject now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I regret to say that I have had little time to analyze the bill. I regret that any necessity has arisen in the District of Columbia, as I would regret that it should arise in any municipality in the country, whereby the ownership and rental of property should be interfered with by law. Undoubtedly the conditions here are somewhat unique, and I presume injustices are being practiced upon a portion of the population. I apprehend that they exist everywhere else in the United States; and if it were possible for Congress to enact a law of this kind and make it applicable to all the cities of the country, it would appeal to me more strongly than it does to have it apply simply to the District of Columbia.

Some of the evils complained of here are quite as much due to people who have come into the District of Columbia during the past few months as to the owners of real estate. When a rich man comes here and tenders his services to the Government for a dollar a year, and then goes out and offers half the value of a furnished house for its occupancy for a single year, he is setting a pace that I think naturally becomes contagious; and the owner of a fine house or the owner of an apartment house which has cost a large amount of money and which, perhaps, has a large deed of trust on it—because a deed of trust comes pretty near being a universal thing in the District of Columbia—naturally feels that as everything has increased in price, as these rentals are being made at these exorbitant rates to a certain class of men who have come here to serve the Government and enjoy the hospitality of Washington, he might as well get a little something in addition for himself.

I had not supposed that the matter had extended as far as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] say it has. We always have greedy men; we always have men who concern themselves little in the welfare of others. If they can benefit themselves, they are very apt to make exactions that are unreasonable. I suspected that that was the case in the District of Columbia to some extent, but I did not suppose it had become infectious, and I think it is well that attention has been called to it.

I want to say in advance that I am not making, and will not make, any factious opposition to this bill. I regret very much indeed the necessity of passing it. I think it is a bad example; but if it is absolutely necessary, of course we will support it and take our chances with it.

I have been a tenant for 30 years in the city of Washington. I own one bit of real estate, of no great value, and I have recently reduced the rental for the purpose of accommodating a man who is in the service of the Government. I think, perhaps, I am unique in that respect, but I was glad to do it; and I have known a few other instances where men have even sacrificed their interests to a certain extent to accommodate friends. But I have been a tenant for 30 years, and I have never felt that I have been imposed upon. I have occupied houses in Washington—a furnished house that I might have continued to occupy longer than I did—at a rental which I thought was very low indeed. I thought it was too low as far as the interests of the owner were concerned. For the most part, I have been in hotels and apartment houses. I have not thought that I have been imposed upon. I do not recall an instance where I have been imposed upon. I have been three years in the apartment house where I now live, one of the largest in the city, and I have thought that the price I paid for a very modest apartment was reasonable. I have not been notified that it is to be increased. Perhaps I shall have that pleasure in the near future. I do not know how that may be. Possibly this bill may save me to some extent; but I have not had that notice, and I have inquired of people in the larger apartment houses in the city and I have yet to have a tenant in one of the really large apartment houses tell me that the practice which the Senator from Ohio says has been current to a large extent has been practiced in that class of apartment houses.

Mr. President, with that preliminary I want to ask the Senator from Ohio a few questions about the bill, because, of course, we want the bill to be a good bill if it can be made a good bill. At any rate, we want it to be the best possible bill that we can have on a subject of this kind.

I was not aware until a moment ago—and doubtless that is my own fault—that the hearings before the committee had been printed. Had I known that, I certainly should have read every word of the hearings, and I am certain that I would have had a great deal more information on the subject than I have at the present time. When the bill was reported I looked for a report, and there was no written report. I venture to say that I think it is always a mistake when an important bill is reported to the Senate to omit making a written report and calling attention to the salient points in the proposed legislation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think that is a sound criticism. We perhaps should have presented a written report; but we were all pressed, and we hoped to get action upon the bill at an early date.

Mr. GALLINGER. But that omission would have been supplied had I known that the hearings had been printed and had I had an opportunity to examine them.

In glancing over the bill—and I have glanced over it very hurriedly—there are a few points that I want to call to the attention of the Senator.

I do not think we can arbitrarily fix a date that will be just to all parties in interest. The committee has fixed it at October 1 last, which is six months ago. I have had experience during the last six months, not so much in renting an apartment as in providing food and clothing for myself and those who are dependent on me; and if rents had been increased during those six months to the extent that the prices of the necessaries of life have been increased in the city of Washington, the situation to-day would have been much more startling than has been depicted by the Senator from Ohio. So I think that in fixing that arbitrary date of October 1 some injustice will necessarily be done to owners of real estate, because the price of everything connected with the upkeep of their property has been vastly increased. The price of coal has been increased; the price of elevator service has been increased; the price of labor necessary to be employed around even a private residence has been largely increased; and there ought to be some allowance made for that. The overhead charges are not what they were on the 1st day of October last by any manner of means. We all know that, all of us who have even very trifling interests in real estate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me observe, first, that the rate as of October 1 is only the prima facie rate for that class of property. For property which was not rented then, but which had been rented theretofore, we took as the prima facie reasonable rate the rate at which it had been last rented before that date. Then, of course, there are other properties that have been rented for the first time since that date, and we provide for a net rental of 7 per cent on that class of property; but those rates are only tentative, and they can be changed by the rent administrator on his motion or on the application of the landlords. Then, if the Senator will allow me to refer him to section 6, on page 13, we care for all of the different items to which the Senator from New Hampshire has just referred:

> In fixing rents of real estate there shall be taken into account the taxes and assessments thereon, the cost of reasonable repairs and maintenance, and of light, heat, water, and elevator and other service, where furnished, as well as a proper allowance for depreciation and non-occupancy.

Mr. GALLINGER. But notwithstanding that, I will ask the Senator if an arbitrary per cent increase is not provided for in the bill?

Mr. POMERENE. I am not sure that I catch the import of the Senator's question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I may be not well informed; as I said, I have not had time to carefully analyze the bill; but after taking into account those various items of expenditure upon what basis, then, is the rental fixed?

Mr. POMERENE. The rental will be so fixed that it will earn a net rental of 7 per cent per annum on the value of the property, and when determining that they must take into consideration all the various items of expense to which I have referred.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad of that. I think that is a wise provision.

Then I notice in section 2 it is provided that the rent on October 1, 1917, whether by the day, week, month, or year, shall be the standard of rent at the present time. It occurred to me to ask this question: Suppose last year the property was rented by the year and now it is rented by the day or week, would it not be manifestly unfair to require the present rate to be at the same rent as the former?

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator fails to take account of this fact: If the property was rented on October 1, 1917, then that is the rate which shall be used as the standard for that property for the time being; in other words, it is prima facie a reasonable rent, and that may be subject to any change that a sense of justice would require.

Mr. GALLINGER. The point that I meant to make, very clumsily stated, no doubt, is this: A man owns a house in the city of Washington with 20 rooms, and he rented it by the year October 1, 1917. There has been a great demand for individual rooms in the District of Columbia, greater than I think there ought to be, because we have a thousand people here who ought to be somewhere else. That man says, "I am going to rent my house now by the individual rooms; these young women or these young men want rooms," would the Senator hold that the aggregate rental of those 20 rooms as individually rented should be the same amount that he got when he rented to one person?

Mr. POMERENE. No; Mr. President, there may be just such a confused state of facts with regard to a particular property as the Senator has in mind, but assuming that to be so, then the rent administrator has the right to subpœna the landlord and compel him to furnish his books, and he can determine then what shall be a reasonable rate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very much afraid of administrators in view of the experience that we had with a Fuel Administrator and a Food Administrator. I am much afraid of a rent administrator.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish the Senator would not refer to a Fuel Administrator; it irritates me.

Mr. GALLINGER. They ought to get a good man for $5,000 a year. I hope they will not take a man interested in real estate in the District of Columbia, because about half the population are interested in that laudable business. I trust that they will find somebody else outside of the profession when they select an administrator. Perhaps they will.

I was going to suggest an amendment, but there are probably committee amendments that are to be acted upon first.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say that there is only one committee amendment, and that is a substitute, so what the Senator has in mind would be in order now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just at this point I am going to offer an amendment. It need not be acted on now. I am going to suggest this amendment at the bottom of page 9:

> Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or bring within the scope of this act properties wherein during the period of its limitation the character of the same has been changed or converted from dwelling to business uses.

Mr. POMERENE. In my judgment the bill is broad enough, if it should become a law, so that it would take into consideration just that condition. I really believe that if the Senator will——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will send the amendment to the Senator, and he can look it over.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, if the bill covers it I have nothing to say, but my attention has been called to quite a number of properties that on October 1, 1917, were occupied for residence purposes and have since been converted into business purposes, and naturally the rental has greatly increased over what it was.

Mr. POMERENE. That would no doubt change it, and I think the rent administrator has full authority under the act to make that change.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am still afraid of the rent administrator.

Passing along, I notice there is a provision, I think in section 6, that rents that have been collected in excess of those permitted by the bill may be recovered by the lessee if action is commenced within six months after the expiration of his tenure. It occurred to me to ask the Senator, Suppose a man pays excess rent for a couple of months or six months after the passage of the bill, after which the rent is reduced, and at the end of 10 years or more he moves out; could he not then recover the excess rent that he paid 10 years before if this bill becomes a law? Of course, to do that we would have to get rid of the statute of limitations, I suppose. I hope the Senator will look carefully at that provision in section 6. It may not need any change at all, but upon reading the bill that occurred to me as a possibility, at least.

Mr. POMERENE. My thought was that if he had possession of the property and was paying an exorbitant rent he would probably not continue to rent that length of time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I may be wrong again as to section 7, but I am going to direct attention to it. That section provides that furnished houses, if rented before the act takes effect—that is, before the approval of this statute—may be allowed at a rate double that which would be allowed for the same house unfurnished. I want to read that again: Furnished houses, if rented before this act takes effect, may be allowed at a rate double that which would be allowed for a house if unfurnished; but if the furnished house is rented after this act takes effect an increase of only 50 per cent is allowed over what would be permitted if the house was unfurnished. Why the difference between those two rates?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator perhaps was not in when I at least attempted to explain that provision, or perhaps I did not make myself entirely clear. We found after a pretty thorough investigation and after hearing what practical men had to say upon the subject that it was a sort of a general rule that the owners of furnished rooms or furnished apartments charge a rate about 100 per cent in excess of what they would have charged for the same room or apartment if unfurnished; and we found that there was what we believed to be a growing evil here in the District. At the present time a number of landlords are seeking to dispossess their tenants. These tenants perhaps had been furnishing their own rooms or apartments and they were to be unceremoniously put out of the place and the landlord would then seek to furnish the apartments, thinking that they could thereby get a largely increased rent; in other words, furnish them cheaply and charge these exorbitant rates. I have had quite a number of cases of that kind called to my attention, where the landlord had been renting apartments for a number of years to these tenants and they furnished them themselves, and the owner said, "We want you to move out. We intend to furnish these apartments and rent them ourselves." We thought that that kind of work ought to be discouraged here in the District at this particular time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will allow me to ask the Senator from Ohio a question right here?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have never quite understood why so high as 100 per cent extra should be allowed for furnished rooms, even where they had been furnished. Let me explain it, and then the Senator will see the force of my question. I know a great many of what are called single-room apartments in the city that are renting for about $30 per month, or have been in the past. They consist of a small living room, a kitchenette, a bath, and two closets. I know about the furnishings of some of those rooms, and I know absolutely and unquestionably that all the furniture in them could be purchased for from $60 to $75, and I should say in many instances I know of their being furnished with secondhand furniture for $40, but I take it at $60 as a fair basis. The furniture consists of a couch which can be converted into a bed, a chair or two, a dresser, and a chiffonier of the cheapest kind of oak or other wood. Now, where the room then would rent unfurnished for $30 per month you would allow them $60 a month, and receive for 12 months $360 additional for furniture that did not cost over $60.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota is having the same difficulty with this subject that members of the committee had. Let me make a suggestion: I am in entire sympathy with what he has said when he illustrates it by the example which he has given. On the other hand, we found that there were a good many apartments in the District that were paying a comparatively small rent, and the occupants of those apartments had been collecting all sorts of furniture of very great value, and ordinarily would not rent out their apartments except when they would be absent from the city or something of that kind, and perhaps they yielded to the tempter somewhat, too. In a case of that kind I think the Senator would agree with me that it was not quite fair to unduly reduce the limit. Just to-day I had a letter. I am not going to give the name of the writer; I am sorry he wrote me the letter; but I am going to read a paragraph from it.

I rent an apartment on ——— Street, within 14 squares of the White House, for which I pay $85 a month rent, because I have a five years' lease on the apartment. Other tenants in the building are paying $100 a month for a year lease. I am a man of moderate circumstances, and rented my apartment furnished to a man who is rated as a millionaire several times over. I value the furniture in the apartment at $5,000, and I lease the same to him for $365 a month.

Mr. McCUMBER. After all, is not that an exceptional case, and could not that be met by some provision that would take into consideration the value of the property? Heretofore, of course, you could receive for a rented room furnished considerably more than the difference between the value, because there are a great many tenants, knowing that they could stay here but a few months in the year, and knowing that they could not sell their furniture for 25 cents on the dollar for what they paid for it, would be willing to pay quite an excessive rent for the use of furniture for a given length of time; but ought that condition to justify us in allowing landlords to furnish rooms and then charge an extra amount of from 100 to 400 per cent upon the value of the furniture they put in the rooms?

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator, perhaps, has not borne in mind accurately the language of the section of the proposed statute. It only fixes the outside limit; and there must be a reasonable rental, and it must be subject to the approval of the rent administrator. I dare say if there is a rent administrator who thinks that 25 per cent would be a reasonable increase because of the furniture there is in the room, he surely would not—at least, he ought not to—allow an increase of 100 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will recall that whenever we have allowed a bureau or anyone else to pay, for instance, not exceeding a certain salary they always regard that as the minimum and, without any further consideration, always pay those salaries.

Mr. POMERENE. There is a good deal of force in the Senator's criticism; but let us bear in mind that, unfortunately, a good many of the officers of the type to which the Senator refers belong to that class who have absolutely no regard for the public, and if they can use the public funds for their own benefit, directly or indirectly, they will do it. But here this administrator is sitting as a quasi judge. He is simply administering this subject with reference to its relation not only to the tenant but to the landlord or vice versa.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me one other word. It is to suggest that we will so amend the bill that in no case shall the charge for the furniture be more than 50 per cent a year, so that the tenant would not more than pay for it in two years. Then, if there is anybody who wishes to go into a house with gold furniture that is diamond studded, and wants to pay a price based upon such very valuable furniture, he will have the privilege of doing so.

Mr. POMERENE. I think there could perhaps be some modification of the bill made in that behalf; but I want to remind the Senator of the fact that when it comes to the making of a lease in the future the limit is 60 per cent of the rental of the room if unfurnished, and 100 per cent is the maximum only as applied to those rooms that are already rented, and then it is subject to the approval of the rent administrator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am also in sympathy with the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota, and yet I wonder how we can interfere with the arrangements that have been made. Some leases run for five years, and where there has been such a lease of an apartment I imagine we can not well tear that up by the roots and establish a different principle as applied to it. I think 50 per cent ordinarily for the furniture of a room or an apartment is a very liberal allowance, and I should think that might be amended.

In this connection the Senator from Ohio read a letter which showed that a man who had an apartment—I judge not an elaborate one—had sublet it to a rich man at an enormously increased amount over what he paid. I am going to ask the Senator if the bill deals with the matter of subletting apartments, and can it well deal with it?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; it controls it. If the Senator's attention has not been specially called to that, he will find in one of the closing sentences of the bill that the words "landlord," "lessor," or "tenant" include all persons who claim to hold "under the original landlord."

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that it is possible for us to control the matter of subletting apartments by statute? A man rents an apartment for $200 a month or $100 a month, and some man comes along who has more money perhaps than discretion and he offers him $400 a month for it if he will sublet it to him for the balance of his lease. Is there any reason why that man should not do that?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to get at the reason.

Mr. POMERENE. In the first place, if the Senator will permit me, I think he overestimates the number of cases that he has in mind, for this reason, that in nearly all the leases in the District there is a clause prohibiting releasing or reletting.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have never happened to see one, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. That was the information we had from some owners of apartment houses. In a number of cases I think that provision has been ignored.

Then, again, there is this to be said: Some people have rented apartments perhaps with the privilege of subletting them, but I am sorry to say that there are a good many of that class of people who have been among the greatest offenders in charging these exorbitant rates. I do not think we ought to unduly interfere with these matters, but it is a question as to what is going to be the best good for the greatest number in a time of great war.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the cases I referred to the offense is not on the part of the man who holds the lease; it is on the part of the man who wants to sublet.

Mr. POMERENE. You mean the proposed tenant?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. The man who holds the lease is ordinarily willing to separate some money from the rich man who wants to sublet his apartments at a much higher rental than he himself is paying, and I think we ought to accommodate that class of rich men and take all the money from them we can.

Mr. POMERENE. Except for this reason: It appeared in the hearings that a number of people drive out to a house that will suit their fancy and go in and offer to pay some exorbitant rent, and the owner yields to the temptation. If there were only those two parties concerned I do not think I would lie awake at night out of sympathy for the person who overpaid, but there have been a number of very rich people who have come here and though a great many of them have done very good work, and I want to give them all credit for it, in some respects, and particularly when it comes to the leasing of property, I think they are a mighty expensive luxury to the city of Washington. The result of it is that other people who have smaller apartments to rent yield to the temptation, and when they see somebody else who is better favored with this world's goods doing these things naturally they say, Let us do it likewise.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; those bad practices are apt to become epidemic.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me to ask a question of the Senator from Ohio about subletting?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. This is an experience meeting.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not examined the bill with the care that I ought to have examined it, but I ask the Senator from Ohio if provision is made for this kind of a situation: There are many people who leave here for the summer months and have apartments that they could very well sublet, but as the Senator stated a while ago and as we all know is customary, there are provisions prohibiting the subletting of apartments except with the consent of the lessor. Suppose the owner of one of these apartment houses or several of the owners or all the owners of the apartment houses would just decline to permit the subletting of the premises. For instance, I have in mind a case where a young man wanted to send his family out of town in summer and he desired to sublet his apartment while they are gone, and the landlord has arbitrarily refused to permit those apartments to be sublet. Now, has he any remedy?

Mr. POMERENE. You are dealing with a pretty serious problem now. If this tenant wants a right to sublet he ought to have the consent of his landlord.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, but these conditions exist, and the landlord will feel aggrieved by the passage of this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I think there will be something of a spirit of accommodation about it. I can understand how any landlord and particularly any landlady would be very glad to have the Senator rent from him or her, but they might object very radically if he were to sublet to every Tom, Dick, and Harry who might come around. That is one of the questions that we have got to deal with, and I do not know that it would be the part of wisdom to attempt to control it absolutely.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that that is a matter of some consequence. If the landlord refuses to allow the tenants to sublet it keeps out of occupancy and prevents a shelter to some people who would be glad to get possession of those houses or apartments. To that extent it aggravates the present situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; if the Senator will permit me, it means that if the landlords refuse to allow the tenants to sublet many apartments in the city of Washington would not be used at a time when they were very much in demand.

Mr. GALLINGER. That goes without the saying.

Now, Mr. President, just one or two more suggestions, and these are not criticisms that I am making but suggestions, because I want information that the Senator from Ohio can give me.

The second paragraph of section 7 reads substantially: In cases where board and room are paid for jointly the rent administrator is to separate the two items and to ascertain what is a reasonable charge for the rooms.

Now, let us imagine that the rent administrator takes up a case of this kind, $10 a week for a room and board. A poor girl occupies it. She complains that it is too much. She wants to have the room rent reduced, and your administrator separates it and says the room is worth $6 and board $4, and I will fix it at that rate; or he will make a reduction in he room rent. If the room rent is reduced, what is going to prevent the owner of the premises from increasing the board?

Mr. POMERENE. We have not attempted to take control of the question of the price of meals or boarding. We can not do that. The purpose is this: We did not want the landlord or hotel keeper to conceal under a joint charge an exorbitant charge for the rooms. That was the reason which prompted the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I apprehend that will be innocuous. I do not think it will have any effect at all. I think the same amount will be reached in a different way.

Mr. POMERENE. It may be so.

Mr. GALLINGER. I notice that $50,000 for this purpose is appropriated in this bill. Of course, these are times when we do not take into account the amount of an appropriation, especially when it is in the thousands it does not count at all; but $50,000 is appropriated, and the pay of the clerical force provided by the bill amounts to $12,500. Of course, there will be some other little expenses, a little furniture, I apprehend, and the rent administrator will be domiciled in the Municipal Building, if they can find room for him, and there is no reason why they should not, because, according to my observation, the rule now is to give about twice the space to each individual clerk that is actually needed. I simply make the suggestion that I think if the amount were put at a smaller sum than $50,000 there would be less danger of extravagance.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has a right to know, and it is my desire to give him, the reasons for fixing the appropriation at this amount. It is true we found upon inquiry that there would be sufficient room in the Municipal Building. It was thought that all that would be needed would be his assistants and clerical hire. The Senator, of course, realizes that, as this is an untried proposition, it is going to be next to impossible for anyone to say within a few hundred or perhaps several thousand dollars what will be the reasonable expense. It will be necessary, of course, to have some supplies and records; and it may be that, while after they have been thoroughly established they may get along with less clerical or field force than they can at present, it is impossible for us to state with exactness how many assistants might be required.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, unless history fails to repeat itself, they will not get along with less force but they will demand an increased force.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask, for information, what is the Senator's judgment as to the amount that should be appropriated here?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think a $30,000 appropriation here would be adequate. That would leave them $17,500 outside of the clerical force and the $5,000 employee.

My attention was attracted to the language of section 16, which reads:

> The words "importing the masculine gender" shall be held to include other genders.

Did the Senator from Ohio notice that language?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it correct?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I think so. The owner might be either of the masculine or the feminine gender, or perhaps, in the case of a corporation, what we know as the neuter gender.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Ohio thinks that is good language, I have no objection.

Section 17 strikes me as being ambiguous in that it fixes two dates. I will state to what I refer. That section fixes two dates on which the bill ceases to be in effect, namely, one is "one year after a treaty of peace shall have been concluded," and the other is "one year after a proclamation thereof shall have been made by the President of the United States." Those two dates may be not widely apart, but they may be some distance apart, to say the least. I would suggest to the Senator that he should use the words which, I think, we have used in the other statutes—"one year after the proclamation of peace shall have been made by the President of the United States."

Mr. POMERENE. That is what was intended. If there is any ambiguity about it, I shall have no objection to an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. At this point I move that amendment to section 17, in line 12, after the word "force."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 17, page 19, line 12, after the word "force," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section and in lieu thereof to insert "for one year after a proclamation of peace shall have been made by the President of the United States," so that, if amended, it will read:

That this act shall remain in force for one year after a proclamation of peace shall have been made by the President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am glad to see a suggestion in section 18 that the President is given authority—an authority that I think he now has—to distribute this mass of employees that is coming into the District of Columbia into other sections of the country. I remember when Admiral Harris was put at the head of the Shipping Board—he did not serve there very long, but he was there for awhile—that he suggested that he wanted to move the force to Philadelphia, where they made ships, instead of putting them on F Street, in the District of Columbia, where, according to his observation, they never had built a ship. I think if his suggestion in that respect had been carried out at that time it would have been a very wise thing. I am not quite sure but that the President has already done something in that line with the Shipping Board or with some other board; perhaps the Emergency Fleet Corporation has been moved, or the suggestion has been made that it ought to be moved.

On that point, Mr. President, I will repeat what I said a few days ago, that this congestion in the city of Washington, because of the influx of clerks and specialists and almost every conceivable class of people, could very easily be removed by distributing them to other sections of the country. Baltimore is near at hand, and I apprehend it would welcome a few thousand of them if they went over there. Probably they could provide some place for them to eat and sleep. New York is still on the map and could be reached. I think if the Food Administrator went over to New York—and the farther away, if they could find a place for him, the better it would suit me—I think if he were sent over to New York with his tremendous force and the $75,000 worth of chairs that he has bought—I believe that is right—and two or three hundred thousand typewriters that he has bought—I mean machines—that New York would be a very good place for him.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. Of course New York City would welcome the Government activities referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire, but I would also tell him that we are having almost as difficult a housing situation in that city as now exists here. At no time in the history of New York have we needed more than at present new buildings for people to live in. We are prevented from having them to some extent because of the attitude of the Treasury Department in advising the banks and mortgage companies against loaning money upon mortgages on real estate. If the Treasury Department changed its attitude, the money could be obtained, new building would be encouraged, and we might then be able to help the housing problem we are facing here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not suppose that New York ever got more than she could take care of in any respect, and I merely imagined that Mr. Hoover, his clerks, and his outfit could be taken care of in New York. At any rate, I would try the experiment if I had the authority to do it.

Then I would take the Fuel Administrator and send him to Pittsburgh or somewhere else in Pennsylvania where they mine coal, where, perhaps, he would get first-hand information concerning the production and the distribution of coal instead of having him in palatial rooms, surrounded by a coterie of highly paid clerks in the city of Washington.

I trust that the suggestion in this bill—as I said a moment ago, I do not believe it is necessary—may lead the President in some leisure hour, which I presume even the President of the United States has, to review the situation, and to see why Washington could not, at least to some extent, be protected, because, as the thing now stands, Washington is going to be in such an unprotected state that we shall have to double our police force; and I do not know what else we shall have to do to take care of the interests of the people who have toiled and saved and built homes here and who are supposed to enjoy the usual comforts of life.

I had read into the RECORD the other day an article from a paper which is published I think in a comparatively obscure town in the State of Wisconsin, which advertised the fact to the citizens of that State that 35,000 more clerks are immediately needed in Washington. I believe it was clerks and draftsmen and people of that kind. The suggestion has been made from some other quarter that we shall need 75,000 or more in the near future. The Lord only knows what they are needed for, and the Lord only knows how we shall take care of them, unless we put tents on not only the public property but on private property in the city, and try to take care of them in that way. However, they come and they are invited to come. The newspapers in every State are telling the young men and the young women to come. They are telling the young men on the farms to leave the farms and come to Washington; that there are places for them with good pay; and, as the article in the Wisconsin newspaper said, the work is all in the United States; that they need not stay at home and take the risk of the draft, but should come to Washington and get a position in the public service, where they will be exempted from the draft. There are a good many of them who are looking in that direction at the present time.

I think it is a matter that should be carefully looked into by some committee or by the President or by the heads of the departments. I do not know how it could be reached, but something ought to be done about it.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to suggest a title for the bill which I think is better than the one it now has. I will send it to the Senator from Ohio, and if he thinks it wise he can make use of it, for there is no copyright or patent on it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may say a word, the Senator from New Hampshire, of course, realizes that this is a House bill, and that we are offering what the committee has reported as an amendment to the House bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. But we may change the title.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; and I think it is necessary to have some change in the title.

Mr. GALLINGER. The title of the bill is "to prevent extortion"—it may be that is well enough—"to impose taxes upon certain incomes." There is no provision in the bill to impose taxes upon incomes so far as I have been able to discover.

Mr. POMERENE. That was in the House bill, and we have not modified it. It will be necessary, in my judgment, to amend the title of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I was going to propose a change of title, so as to read:

To provide further for the national security and defense—

Of course, that is a patented phrase which we have to use anyhow. I presume we will have to use it in the case of pension bills very soon—

To provide further for the national security and defense by controlling and regulating the rents of real estate in the District of Columbia.

I suggest some such title as that.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say about this bill. Perhaps some Senators may be disposed to think I have been inclined to be jocular; I have not felt that way. I can only express my regret that there is necessity for legislation of this kind, absolutely overturning our system of government in this respect, destroying the relation of landlord and tenant which has prevailed from the foundation of the Government to the present time, and while, perhaps, the system has not always worked as well as could have been wished, nevertheless we have been able to go along with it under the law of supply and demand, and very little harm has come from it. But all at once we are confronted with this tremendous influx into the city of Wasnington of young men and young women, most of them not qualified for the places they are trying to fill, as I chance to know, and probably something ought to be done, and it is very possible that this legislation is the best that can be conceived. The committee deserves a great deal of credit for the labor which they have expended upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If the Senator will pardon me, I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, my feelings are in entire accord with his in regard to this legislation; and I think I can say in behalf of most, if not all, of the members of the committee, that they share the regret that conditions and circumstances are such as to call for any such bill as this.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to have the Senator say that, because, knowing the Senator from Maryland as I do, and looking at him, as I have been doing in my rambling remarks this afternoon, I have wondered whether this proposed legislation did appeal to the Senator from Maryland, a sound, conscientious, old-fashioned business man.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that it is very displeasing to me to be called on to enact such legislation. It is turning aside from all the paths along which business has been regulated and conducted in the past. It is not in accord with my views of doing business, and I would be glad if the necessity for this legislation could be obviated. It is not only displeasing to me, but I think it is regretted by the entire membership of the committee, so far as I know, that it should be necessary to enact such a bill as this.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am a very careful man about little things, because I have to be. I have been in Washington about 30 years, and I have had some experience with reference to the cost of living in the city of Washington. We were wise enough to increase the salaries of the Members of both Houses of Congress. I was warned at the time that if I advocated the increase, which I did with a good deal of vigor, I would be called to account for it by my people; but I was not, and I have seen very little adverse criticism on the part of the people of any State of the American Union because of the fact that we have increased our salaries. We are now increasing the salaries year by year of the subordinate employees of the Government, which I think is entirely just and right; but when it comes to the question of increased rents, in my opinion, that is a small evil compared to the increase in everything else. I have an impression that the average merchant in Washington comes from his counting room in the morning and says, "Well, boys, mark it up 5 or 10 per cent to-day," and I dare say it will be 15 per cent after a little while. I made a little purchase this morning of an article for which I paid over twice the amount I paid for a similar article here one year ago.

If Congress has the right to upset all the traditions and customs of the country and go into the matter of regulating rents and leases and all that sort of thing, denying to men the right to sell their property, if they want to sell it, and holding them up, I have wondered whether they could not with equal propriety take up the broad question of prices, with which our Democratic friends were going to deal in 1912, according to their platform of that year, in which they said they were going to reduce the high cost of living. Thinking that there may be at some time further legislation on this subject, or possibly that it may appeal to the committee, I am going to have the Secretary read an amendment, which I am not going to offer, but which I will have read for the information of the Senate, because it expresses exactly my views on the subject, and when that is done I am through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill a new section as follows:

"SEC. 20. From and after the passage of this act the prices in the District of Columbia of the articles enumerated below shall be that at which they were sold on October 1, 1917, to wit:

"Sugar, flour, milk, evaporated milk, canned tomatoes, canned corn, canned peas, canned beans, corn meal, hominy, rice, oatmeal, macaroni, spaghetti, prunes, canned salmon, navy beans, lima beans, catchup, canned soup, split peas, black-eyed peas, asparagus, asparagus tips, canned beets, cream of wheat, sardines, molasses, table sirup, canned peaches, canned pineapple, peanut butter, cornstarch, canned spinach, rib roast, chuck roast, plate beef, porterhouse steak, sirloin steak, round steak, chuck steak, hamburg steak, butter, fresh hams, fresh shoulders, fresh pork chops, fresh pork roast, corned shoulders, corned hams, smoked hams, smoked shoulders, smoked bacon, smoked sausage, pure lard, compound lard, potatoes, onions, lettuce, sweet potatoes, cabbage, apples, bananas, lemons, and all other articles of food whatsoever; coal, wood, coke, fuel oil, gas, electricity, and all other articles of fuel whatsoever; clothing, of cotton, wool, leather, or other material and all articles entering into its manufacture; and in addition to the above every article or commodity sold or offered for sale in said District."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not offered that as an amendment; it was read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question in relation to section 13 of the bill, which provides in substance that the President may commandeer certain vacant property, and that the rentals and conditions of tenancy shall be fixed by the rent administrator in his discretion.

I was under the impression that property could not be commandeered for public use, except on the payment of compensation to be fixed ultimately by a court, and that that was a judicial question which could not be taken away from the courts. If the Senator having charge of the bill is of that opinion I will suggest an amendment which would make the section constitutional. I may be wrong about the Constitution; my views upon that subject have had to be revised a good many times since the war commenced, but my education is such that it rather seems to me that it might be well to make the section constitutional.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator offer his amendments?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I want to say just a word or two about this bill. I do not see how I can vote for it if I believe there is any Constitution of the United States left at all and if I remember the oath I took as a Member of this body to support and defend it. I have no idea that any court in the world would ever uphold or sustain this bill. I have no doubt that during war times and as a part of the war power the Government of the United States can commandeer the use of property of any sort for war purposes. It can not, however, enact legislation applicable to a whole people on matters thoroughly disconnected with the prosecution of the war, nor can it take property under circumstances like the present without providing for the ascertainment of the value of the property by due process of law, as provided in the fifth amendment to the Constitution; and due process of law, as provided in the fifth amendment, has been held by every court that ever considered it to be ascertainment of the facts by a court and jury in a judicial proceeding.

Undoubtedly, for the purpose of prosecuting this war, we could provide that, wherever it was necessary to do so, the Government could commandeer and condemn leasehold estates, if necessary, to house people whose activities were necessary to the Government in the prosecution of the war; but we must confine it strictly and solely to that; and we can not even do that much without providing that in the end the question of what these rents shall be is a matter for judicial determination to be decided by a court and jury.

I am in sympathy with the expressions of many Senators about the almost intolerable condition that exists in the District. As some Senator expressed it earlier in the session, Washington at present is very much like an overcrowded western mining camp. There are a great many things that we, acting as the municipal council of the District of Columbia, can do constitutionally and properly to relieve the situation. I am willing to do them all, and to go as far as we can within the limits of the power that we have to act; but so far as this particular question is concerned I have no doubt as to what those limits are, and I have in like manner no doubt that this bill far exceeds and passes those limits.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 6, after the word "Government," it is proposed to insert "or has been disposed of to a bona fide purchaser for his own occupancy."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this amendment is offered so that in case the owner of a house in the District of Columbia is compelled to part with his property because of business needs he may be able to dispose of it to a purchaser who intends to occupy it. As I read the bill, the owner of a house in this city would be unable to give possession if he sold his property even to an intended occupant if his tenant was in the Government employ and a monthly tenant. I have in mind a case that was called to my attention yesterday. About three months ago the rent of the home of a Government employee in this District was raised, and he was compelled to move because he could not afford to pay the additional rent. Thereupon he purchased a piece of property, paying $500 down, and agreeing to pay the balance in stipulated semiannual installments until the entire purchase price was paid. He finds now, under the terms of this bill, as it has been construed, he will be unable to get possession, although he made the purchase in good faith. If we are going to enact legislation to prevent people from selling their property to bona fide purchasers in many cases it will mean ruin.

A similar amendment was agreed to in the joint resolution passed yesterday, and I am hopeful that it will not be objected to now. Very often, Mr. President, whole communities change because of improvements in the style of buildings. One has only to point to a situation like that existing on Broadway, New York City, between Chambers Street and Twenty-third Street, where property may be purchased to-day at 40 per cent of what it brought 10 years ago. Who can tell but what the same conditions may exist in this city after the war, and for us to say that a person shall be prevented from disposing of his property at a profit by hedging in the opportunities for sale by any such method as the terms of this bill provide is little short of confiscation. Not to pass the amendment proposed seems to me would plainly be unfair to people who have property and who may wish to dispose of it in good faith.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has referred to section 13. The genesis of that section was this: It was represented to the committee that a great many owners of large properties in Washington occupy them for a month or so and then go away for the remainder of the year. In one instance it was stated that an owner refused to rent a magnificent home for less than $50,000 a year. Some of the committee thought that those fine homes would be delightful places for working girls and clerks in the departments, and that when the owners came home it would please them to find these magnificent places occupied. A provision was inserted to cover those cases. I have not any doubt in my own mind, however, that the section is clearly unconstitutional and should be changed in the way the Senator from Minnesota suggests. I think that ought to be done, because we can not take private property for public use without some judicial determination of the value thereof. The section is not well drawn.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Why is not that true about all of this bill?

Mr. KENYON. It is true of any such question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is not all of the bill equally unconstitutional?

Mr. KENYON. I am going to confine myself to section 13 and not discuss the other features of the bill. I think other sections may be close to the line, but the complete answer that is always given here is that we are in war; these are war times.

Of course, this is a drastic bill. There is not any question about it. When you first read it over, it is shockingly drastic; but the conditions that have arisen in the District are drastic and need drastic remedies.

I want to put a short article in the RECORD as expressing my view of this profiteering situation in Washington. The same situation exists everywhere in this country. People are trying to get rich out of this war, and that is an insidious cancer that is eating away at the vitals of this Republic. It has got to stop, and we might as well begin right here in Washington. The Washington Times a few evenings ago printed a short article on this subject. I want to put it in the RECORD as part of my remarks; and I think I will ask to have it read, because it states the situation so clearly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Times of May 3, 1918.]

PRINT THE NAMES AND PICTURES OF PROFITEERS—THEY KEEP A PHOTOGRAPHIC RECORD AT POLICE HEADQUARTERS—WHY NOT ADD TO IT?

[By Earl Godwin.]

Publicity is always pleasing to the person involved until some brave newspaper prints the names and pictures of men involved in nefarious enterprises.

Many well-known men in Washington have swelled with pride when the news columns announced their appointment to this or that committee engaged in one activity or another of benefit to the community.

How would it be if the Government officials printed the names of men who have served "buy the house or move" notices on tenants?

If this kind of business is reputable, would it hurt anyone's feelings or reputation to have his picture printed alongside of a picture of the helpless family he is evicting so that he can take a war-time profit at the expense of some one else who is left helpless?

Personally I believe that parallel to the liberty-loan roll of honor for Washington there should be a roll of profiteers, naming the men who have evicted tenants for war-time profits, as well as those who have put the screws on to the extent of making tenants buy houses at outrageously increased values.

The names of these men should live in memory, like the names of the crooked sutlers who vampired on their fellowmen in the Civil War and the names of the thieves who got rich on embalmed beef in the Spanish War.

A few money-mad men and women are smearing Washington with mud because they have at this moment the opportunity to make a few dirty dollars. To make these dirty dollars they are taking advantage of the most awful war the world has ever known and are backing whole families against a war, pointing a pistol at them, saying:

"You poor fools, there is no other place in the world for you to live, so here is where I get mine, and get it big. You pay me a quadrupled profit on this house or get out into the street."

The Government ought to take war-time steps to prevent this war-time crime.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill for a moment. I do not know how many amendments have been suggested, and I scarcely know whether they are pending or not; but I wish to suggest another which I hope will be adopted, and that is to section 7. I suggest striking out all of the section after the word "rental" on line 22 and inserting after the word "rental," in lieu thereof these words, "for the furniture in addition to the rental for the real estate," so that the section will read:

SEC. 7. That when the real estate is rented furnished, the rent administrator shall authorize a fair and reasonable rental for the furniture in addition to the rental for the real estate.

Then leave out all of the other portion of the section, which allows the rent administrator to put his O. K. upon a rental contract which adds 100 per cent for the use of the furniture in one instance and 50 per cent for the use of the furniture in the other instance. That would leave it within the discretion of the rent administrator to determine, according to the character of the furniture and its value, what would be a reasonable rental for it. I want to say to the Senator that as it now stands it is an invitation, or at least a suggestion, to the rent administrator that he will have fulfilled the expectations of Congress if he allows a rental for the furniture which does not exceed 100 per cent of what the rental would be for the same room unfurnished.

Let me give again an illustration: I think you will find that the vast majority of these rentals in apartments or in other houses cover from one to two rooms; that is, the most of them probably would be, for a single individual or two individuals, one living room, a kitchenette, a bathroom, and a clothes closet. If there were two rooms, there would be one small room in addition to these that I have mentioned. Probably the rent at the present time for the two rooms would be, say, $40. If that apartment is furnished, however, you would allow the landlord to charge $80 for the same apartment; that is, you would allow the rent to run up as high as $80 and still keep within what we might say was the spirit of the law. To me that is the most excessive character of robbery, if I may describe it as such.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] but a short time ago instanced the case of one of these landlords giving notice of his intention to furnish all of the rooms and then to rerent them. I am not at all surprised at that. I do not know of anything that gives a more wonderful opportunity for profiteering than the opportunity for a landlord to add 50 per cent or 100 per cent to his rent by merely furnishing his rooms, because there is nothing here to indicate how many pieces of furniture there shall be, the character or the value of the furniture; and if you will go into one of these rooms that is furnished you will find ordinarily that the furniture is of the most meager character, without a picture on the walls to make it pleasant, without one of the hundreds of little things in the matter of cushions or otherwise to go with a sofa to make it comfortable or to look well, but possibly a sleeping couch and one or two chairs and a chiffonier and a few hooks in a closet, and there you stop. That can be furnished very cheaply, indeed.

It does seem to me that the character and value of the furniture ought to be considered in determining what should be a fair rental, and certainly no landlord can complain if you authorize the administrator, in addition to what the property would be worth to rent unfurnished, to fix a price which would be reasonable and just and fair for the furniture that he may put in. Then if expensive furniture is put in the apartment, he will pay less for it, and in the case of this very meager furniture, which I declare can be bought in almost any of these apartments for $60, he would not be allowed to charge $480 a year in one instance or $240 a year in another instance in addition to the rent of the apartment unfurnished, merely because he has it furnished; and, having it furnished, of course, he will not rent it in any way except furnished.

We ought to leave no loophole open whereby these profiteers can find a method of still following their inclination to take advantage of those who must have a roof to sleep under, at least. I hope the Senator will agree with me and that he may allow an amendment that will base the rental for the furniture upon the value or character of that furniture, leaving it in some form so that the party selected as administrator may pass his judgment upon the additional value that has accrued by reason of the furnishings.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that there is no special objection on the part of the committee or any member of it to putting such a provision as that in the bill, except this reason, which I think is one that will appeal to the Senator from North Dakota:

Under the suggested provision of the Senator from North Dakota a multitude of cases will be poured in on this rent administrator for adjudication which will not come in if the provision is left as it now is, although he can make corrections when particularly appealed to. I want to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that under the amendment which he suggests, in principle, the rents in some cases will very much exceed 100 per cent where they would now only think of charging double the rent for the real estate. As a matter of simplification, the limitation on the rent for the furnishings to 100 per cent in cases where the apartments are now rented and to 50 per cent later on is a very great limitation on the amount.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion right here?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Surely.

Mr. McCUMBER. Where the Senator would find one case where the furniture would justly add 100 per cent to the rental value, he would find 500 cases where it ought not to add 30 per cent to the rental value; and therefore we ought not to suggest to the administrator that he can allow 50 per cent or can allow 100 per cent, even though the furniture should not add over 25 per cent.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the Senator is entirely right when he says there will be 500 cases where it will not come up to that to one where it will come up to that. For the most part, I think the furnished apartments in Washington, as far as I have seen them, when a person goes into them look like a bride's parlor, as we say in our part of the country. The furniture is rather scanty, because the wedding presents have not been sufficient to furnish the whole house; so that we would describe a Washington apartment as looking like a bride's parlor. I think that is the case.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I may be permitted again by the Senator, most of these apartments that I have seen are so decidedly small that you could not get very much furniture into them. It would have to be of an excessively high value to run over $60 or $70.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is another suggestion, too, that all of that leads to the simple life, which is something that we want to encourage at this time. If the Senator will prepare such an amendment as he suggests I think the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill would accept it; but, personally, I rather think the bill is in better shape as it is now. That is my opinion.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have prepared it. I stated what it would be. Shall I state it again?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Personally, I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state it again, if the Senator will take his bill.

On page 13, section 7, line 22, I suggest striking out all after the first word in that line—"rental"—down to and including line 6 on page 14, and to insert these words after "rental," "for the furniture in addition to the rental for the real estate," so that it will read:

SEC. 7. That when the real estate is rented furnished, the rent administrator shall authorize a fair and reasonable rental for the furniture in addition to the rental for the real estate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I said, Mr. President, I think the present form is preferable to the form as it would be with the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. I suggest that we take a vote of the Senators here present and let them determine it. I should vote against making the amendment, but since the Senator feels as he does about it, I have not any complaint to make of the provision as it would then stand, although I think it is better as it is.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me call attention to the fact that under the bill as it now stands there is an invitation or at least a suggestion to the rent administrator that he will have complied with the spirit of this law if he allows not more than 100 per cent additional rental for the room in one instance, and not more than 50 per cent additional for the rental of the room if it happens to be a furnished room, no matter how meagerly or how cheaply furnished. Now, that is unjust. It will operate unjustly. It gives a splendid opportunity for the landlord to do what was done in the case that the Senator from Ohio suggested, where he notified his lessees that he was going to furnish his rooms, and then charge them extra because of the furniture. I do not think he did that until after this bill had been suggested, and he saw the wonderful opportunity of getting 100 per cent on his rental where he would not be entitled to more than 10 per cent according to the value of the furniture; and if we allow the rent administrator to exercise his discretion, and say that it shall be just and reasonable, there will be no difficulty. Why? Because ordinarily the furniture in an apartment will be practically the same in all the rooms of a certain class, and a report will be made of them, and he can easily tell how much the additional charge should be.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia rose.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was only going to ask the Senator, in his reply, to call attention to the limitations contained in the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Precisely. I can not agree to the logic of the Senator from North Dakota. The wording of the authorization to the rent administrator here is that he shall allow a fair and reasonable rate, including furniture.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not exceeding so much.

Mr. SAULSBURY. And the limitation is on the ability of the administrator to increase the rental of the furniture beyond, in the one case, the rent which is paid for the real estate, and in future cases to half that amount. It seems to me that every matter of this kind depends upon the fairness of the rent administrator. If you take all limitations off the rent administrator, certainly you give an unfair rent administrator a much wider latitude. He will not place the rent of the furniture at a maximum of 100 per cent of the rent of the real estate, and less than that in some cases, if he has no limit at all. In this bill we place a limit on the ability of the rent administrator to allow rent for the furnishings, and that is certainly better than giving him an unbridled license to allow whatever he sees fit, in his discretion. I think so, at least.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator if he can recall an instance in which any law of Congress has allowed a salary or has allowed a charge for rental not to exceed a certain amount where that limit has not always been given? That is taken to be the expression of Congress as to its view of what is just and proper. I think it is certain that they will run up to the 100 per cent in almost every instance; whereas if you limit it to what is simply just and reasonable, if the furniture that is furnished is worth more than 100 per cent of the rent of the apartment itself, he ought to pay more than 100 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What does the Senator think of making a limitation based upon the value of the furniture?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I am making.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mean, to put in some definite figure, not to exceed such a per cent of the value of the furniture.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I should say that, I would say not to exceed 50 per cent of the value of the furniture, so that two years' rent would pay for the furniture.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest that it be 25 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I think 25 per cent would be enough.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Twenty-five per cent of the value of the property would be just as much as ought to be allowed, and I do not think over 50 per cent in any event.

E. B. STAHLMAN, OF NASHVILLE, TENN.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am informed that there will not be a vote on this rent bill this afternoon, and I desire to make a brief statement on another subject.

On last Friday the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], in a speech that was delivered here, spoke of the dismissal of an assistant United States district attorney at Nashville, Tenn., by the Attorney General of the United States and, in substance, stated that the assistant district attorney had been dismissed because of his activity in looking out for aliens and ferreting out those who ought to be punished under the alien law, and especially because of his attitude toward Maj. E. B. Stahlman.

The next morning an article appeared in the Nashville Tennessean and American, from which I read this excerpt:

While Senator SHERMAN was making his speech, E. B. Stahlman, the Nashville publisher, was in the gallery, and he at once got in touch with Senators SHIELDS and MCKELLAR and began a counterattack. Neither of the Tennessee Senators spoke personally in behalf of the Nashville publisher, but at their instance Senator WALSH interrupted Senator SHERMAN to say that his information was that Campen was removed because "he had not been sufficiently vigorous in prosecutions under the espionage act and under other acts connected with the war."

When asked where he secured this statement of the reason for Campen's removal, Senator WALSH stated that he had been told these reasons were assigned by Attorney General Gregory in the public press. He also stated that he had discussed the case with Senator MCKELLAR.

In the first place, Mr. President, I desire to say that that statement is substantially wholly untrue. I doubt if, other than the names connected with it, there is the substance of truth in it, or in any part of it, in so far as it refers to me.

It is not only untrue, but the whole article and proceeding is an attack by a so-called Democratic newspaper on a Democratic Attorney General and a Democratic administration.

I wish to say at the outset that I do not mean to criticize in the least the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] for having brought the dismissal of Mr. Campen to the attention of the Senate. In my humble judgment, Senator SHERMAN was simply misled about the facts. He was given the alleged facts by some designing persons, whose names I need not now refer to. I desire, very briefly, to state what the real facts were.

For a number of years in Nashville, Tenn., there has been what is known as a newspaper war between the Nashville Tennesean and American, owned by former Senator Luke Lea, now Col. Lea, of the Army, and the Nashville Banner, owned by Maj. E. B. Stahlman. Mr. Marven Campen was an assistant district attorney in the Nashville district, and, generally speaking, he is allied with the Tennessean side of that newspaper controversy. He was for a while Senator Lea's private secretary, belongs to what was formerly known as the Lea faction in Tennessee politics, is personally a very decent fellow, and was probably misled by self-seeking politicians to adopt the very misguided, uncalled-for, and disloyal attitude toward his chief, Attorney General Gregory, as will hereafter be more fully pointed out.

On December 3 he, or his immediate chief, Mr. Douglas, wrote a letter to Attorney General Gregory, stating in substance that Maj. Stahlman was born in Germany and had never been naturalized, and asking the Attorney General for an opinion as to Maj. Stahlman's status. On the 17th of December the Attorney General replied to District Attorney Douglas that under that state of facts Maj. Stahlman was an alien and would have to be registered under the alien act. Maj. Stahlman learned something of this movement by the district attorney's office and shortly after that, I believe on January 25, presented to the Attorney General, through Senator SHIELDS, his papers and court records, which were substantially these:

He had come to this country with his father and mother when a boy about 10 years old, as I recall his age—a very tender age, at any rate. When he was about 11 years old his father died. His father was a German subject. His mother was a German subject. His father had applied for naturalization papers, as I recall, but they had never been perfected at the time of his death. Not long—perhaps about a year or a little more—after the death of Frederick Stahlman, the father of Maj. Stahlman, his mother married a second time. She married a Mr. Lewis Harnish, also a German subject. I think this was about 1854 or 1855. Mr. Harnish applied for citizenship and secured it. By a court decree he became in 1856 a duly legalized naturalized American citizen. Under the terms of the statute then existing, and still existing I believe, that naturalized all of the minor step-children of Mr. Harnish, including Maj. Stahlman. It is perfectly plain. There is no doubt about it. There can not be any possible answer to that proposition. As I stated, on the 25th day of January my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] presented to the Attorney General certified copies of the court decrees and various other evidences of the fact, and thereupon the Attorney General wrote to my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] this letter:

JANUARY 25, 1918.

Hon. JOHN KNIGHT SHIELDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHIELDS: I have carefully considered the documents submitted by you in respect to the citizenship of Edward B. Stahlman, of Nashville, Tenn., and the necessity of his registering as a German alien enemy.

From these documents it appears that Edward B. Stahlman was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, September 2, 1844, the son of Frederick Stahlman and Christiana Stahlman (born Christiana Lange), German subjects, who were married in Mecklenburg, Germany, in the year 1834; that he was brought to the United States in October, 1853, by his father and mother, who settled in Doddridge County, Va.; that his father, Frederick Stahlman, died in the United States in January, 1855; that his mother, Christiana Stahlman, after the death of her husband, Frederick Stahlman, and in December, 1855, was married in the United States to Mr. Lewis Harnish, then a German alien; that on October 20, 1856, Lewis Harnish completed his naturalization as an American citizen and was, by the circuit court of Doddridge County, Va. (now West Virginia), duly admitted a citizen of the United States of America; that at the time of the naturalization and admission of Lewis Harnish, stepfather of Edward B. Stahlman, as an American citizen, the mother of Edward B. Stahlman was (so far as appears) living in the United States, and her son, Edward B. Stahlman, was a minor of the age of 12 years, then permanently residing or dwelling within the United States; that Edward B. Stahlman has since continued to reside permanently in the United States; and that he has not expatriated himself.

If the facts be as stated, Mr. Edward B. Stahlman became naturalized as an American citizen on October 20, 1856, by the naturalization on that date of his stepfather, and is not required to register in the forthcoming registration of German alien enemies. His subsequent filing of a declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States is to be regarded merely as cumulative evidence of election of United States citizenship, as he was already a citizen of the United States by the naturalization of his stepfather, and was none the less so because he may, at the time of filing his declaration of intention, have entertained unfounded doubts on the subject.

Respectfully,

T. W. GREGORY, Attorney General.

Mind you, before that, upon the state of facts that had been submitted by District Attorney Douglas, or his assistant, Mr. Campen, the Attorney General had stated if those facts were true, that is to say, if Maj. Stahlman was born in Germany and had never been naturalized, he was a German subject; but upon this state of facts presented by Senator SHIELDS upon the proof submitted, the Attorney General notified the district attorney at Nashville on the 25th day of January that Maj. Stahlman was a naturalized citizen under the conditions that I have just now recited. That letter was written on January 25, and was mailed on the 26th day of January. It should have been in Nashville on the 28th day of January, but on the 29th day of January the Nashville Tennesseean and American, a rival newspaper that I spoke of, had in headlines on the front page an article like this:

E. B. Stahlman is declared to be an alien enemy.

And under a purported dispatch from Washington it said this:

It has been ascertained that the Department of Justice has apprised Government officials at Nashville that the status of E. B. Stahlman, of that city, is that of an alien enemy. It is understood this information was given preparatory to the registration of alien enemies, which begins within the next few days.

Thereupon this was added as a local statement:

In the absence of United States District Attorney Lee Douglas, who is away on his vacation, his assistant, Marven Campen, was informed of the above dispatch, and when questioned with regard thereto said: If Maj. Stahlman's status as an alien enemy is a secret, I have not been made aware of it. According to a communication in our files from the Department of Justice Maj. Stahlman is an alien enemy within the meaning of the phrase in the statute. This office did not consider Maj. Stahlman's status an item of news and has sought no opportunity to publish the fact. Now that it comes from Washington as an item of news, and since the Department of Justice at Washington is fully aware of his status, I see no impropriety in making this statement.

Then he adds this, and I regret that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is not in the Chamber, because I wanted to call his attention to this significant statement by the assistant district attorney:

This office is not unmindful of the further fact that no newspaper in the United States has been more patriotic and loyal in its utterances since the declaration of war than Maj. Stahlman's paper, the Nashville Banner.

The assistant district attorney acting in the matter, the district attorney being away on vacation as stated, claimed that he did not receive that letter of the Attorney General inclosing the letter to Senator SHIELDS until the 30th, the day after the foregoing article was published in the Tennesseean and about two days after the letter ought to have been in Nashville. Thereupon Mr. Campen finds a conflict between the Attorney General's direction to him and the statement made in the Nashville Tennesseean and American above quoted, and he sends this telegram to the Attorney General:

Refer your A. B. 188961-1 A. B.-M. R. December 17, 1917—

Evidently referring to the letter of December 17—

and your J. L. O'B-A. H. C.—

Evidently referring to the later letter—

January 25, 1918. Dispatch from Washington dated as of 29th appears in morning paper here states E. B. Stahlman is alien enemy. In view of apparent conflict, please advise E. B. Stahlman's real status.

DOUGLAS,
United States Attorney.

In other words, the Tennesseean and American—think of it, Mr. President—a local paper, had published a statement about the matter that was in conflict with the Attorney General's instructions to the district attorney, and the assistant district attorney, in the absence of the district attorney, assumed the rôle of critic and wired the Attorney General of the United States to explain his position! I am not surprised that the Attorney General sent this telegram on January 30, the same day. If he had wired an instant dismissal of the author of the telegram, he would have been clearly within his right, but he contented himself with only a reprimand. I read:

JANUARY 30, 1918.

LEE DOUGLAS, United States Attorney,
Nashville, Tenn.:

Your wire 30th received. My letter to you 25th with inclosed copy of letter to Senator SHIELDS of same date perfectly clear. Since then have qualified this letter in no way. This department sent you no wire on 29th in regard to Stahlman, nor did it send any such wire to any other person, nor did it make any announcement qualifying letter written to you on 25th. Manufactured newspaper articles do not alter my instructions to you. Fail to understand why you should have sent me wire 30th. Write fully and explain.

T. W. GREGORY, Attorney General.

I think Mr. Campen was exceedingly fortunate that the Attorney General of the United States had not sent him a wire dismissing him that very day, but a day or two later Mr. Campen sent a letter in apparent explanation, but merely setting forth the telegrams and then sent this, giving this as a reason. I ask unanimous consent to put the letter in the RECORD. I am not going to read it, but I am just going to read the last paragraph of it:

On account of the prominence—

This was after quoting the various telegrams—

On account of the prominence of Maj. Stahlman, many citizens, and more especially Maj. Stahlman's friends, inquired at this office with regard to the dispatch in the morning paper, and, in justice to Maj. Stahlman, I felt it my duty to wire you.

Respectfully (for and in the absence of the United States attorney),

MARVEN CAMPEN,
Assistant United States Attorney.

Later on Mr. Campen sent a long letter to the Attorney General virtually advising him that he was wrong in his contention and giving a lot of stuff about contentions down there between these rival newspapers and saying that he sent this letter not as assistant district attorney but as a private individual. Naturally, the United States Attorney General felt that he could not stand that kind of conduct any longer in the assistant district attorney and discharged him.

Mr. President, I wish to say this for the Attorney General. He acted in a perfectly proper way in the discharge of Mr. Campen. I do not see how he could have done anything else and maintain his self-respect. Mr. Campen had sent him that telegram demanding to know his position because of the article he had seen in the newspaper—virtually demanding to know whether the Attorney General was right in his judgment in the matter. He afterwards, in a subsequent communication, disagreed with him about the law and facts of the case and virtually asked him to reverse his decision, and, as I recall it, said something about it making no difference whether he lost his place or not. The last communication was virtually a challenge to the Attorney General to discharge him, and thereupon he was discharged; and I for one say that the Attorney General did exactly right in making that dismissal upon that state of facts. I do not see how he could have done anything else.

I can add this further, that Maj. Stahlman never mentioned the name of Mr. Campen directly or indirectly to the Attorney General and never wrote to him about the matter; that neither Senator SHIELDS nor myself have at any time spoken to the Attorney General about Mr. Campen until after he had been removed, and, so far as I am concerned, the first time I ever knew it was when I saw the statement in the newspapers or heard it on the street. The Attorney General never consulted with either Senator SHIELDS or myself about the matter before he acted. His reasons for discharging Mr. Campen were certainly ample, and he is to be commended for it rather than to be criticized. I am sure if my friend the Senator from Illinois had had all these facts before him, he would not have presented this matter to the Senate, for he is a fair man. These statements were made to Senator SHERMAN in the interest of the discharged officer, and I am sure Senator SHERMAN would have disregarded them if he had not simply been misled, and accordingly his criticism of the Attorney General would not have been made.

Mr. President, it appears from the RECORD that Senator WALSH asked some questions of the Senator from Illinois. It appears in this newspaper account which I have just read that I got Senator WALSH to represent me in asking questions of Senator SHERMAN. Mr. President, there is no man in the Senate for whose attainments I have greater respect than I have for those of the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. He is one of the ablest men in this body and is my friend, but I have never yet felt called upon to have other Senators represent me in this body. I may speak for myself very much worse than it ought to be done, but up to date I have never felt the necessity of calling on others to represent me when I had something to say or questions to ask, and I think I can safely say in the presence of the Senator from Montana that I made no such request of him; that I never knew anything about the matter until after it happened, when he very kindly told me what had occurred during my temporary absence.

As a matter of fact, on that afternoon, the Senate being devoted to business with which I was not directly concerned, I was in the Post Office Committee in the active performance of my duties on that committee and therefore I did not hear it. I understand that Senator SHIELDS was in the Judiciary Committee at work on the administration bill that he had passed here to-day and he did not hear it. The first I knew about the matter or ever dreamed of such a matter was when Senator WALSH called my attention to it upon my return to the Chamber, as I now recall. I called Senator SHIELDS's attention to it that night at supper at the Continental Hotel. These are the facts.

So the article is manufactured out of the whole cloth, and I content myself with saying nothing further about it. It is not the first time that this representative of the Tennessean and American has untruthfully assailed me here from the press gallery in his articles to the Tennessean and other papers. I do not know what the rules of the Senate are about this matter. I do not know whether it is proper for a man in the newspaper fraternity to write falsehoods about a Senator and still remain in the press gallery of the Senate or not. This is the second time I have had to call attention publicly to the malicious and vindictive falsehoods that have been written about me by this representative of the Tennessean and American from his place in the press gallery. My understanding is that members in that gallery are permitted there through the courtesy of the Senate. So long as they write the truth, no Senator can complain, but when a man using those privileges so far forgets himself as to write repeated falsehoods about a Senator, as a matter of simple justice to the Senator those privileges should be withdrawn from the offending writer.

Now, I come to the next question of Maj. Stahlman's loyalty, about which the distinguished Senator from Illinois had something to say the other day. I take Mr. Campen's own statement before the question arose. He said:

This office is not unmindful of the further fact that no newspaper in the United States has been more patriotic and loyal in its utterances since the declaration of war than Maj. Stahlman's paper, the Nashville Banner.

That is not all. On the very day that war was declared Maj. Stahlman, who prior to that time, as I recall it, was opposed to the war, announced in large headlines on the front page of his paper that he wanted every man of military age working for that paper to enlist in the Army, and he made the additional statement that the Banner would pay to everyone who went into the Army from his paper's force one-half of his wages for the benefit of his family all the time he was there. He is carrying out that promise to-day.

Is that loyalty? I wish to Heaven that other owners of newspapers and other men had that kind of loyalty. I wonder if the owner of his rival newspaper down there is doing as much for his employees who have gone into the Army? I say a man with a record of that kind ought not to be assailed in this body or anywhere else in the defamatory way that Maj. Stahlman has been assailed. Maj. Stahlman has lived 53 years of his life in Nashville. He has been and is a successful man of affairs there. He owns large interests there. He is one of our most useful and distinguished citizens. He owns one of the best newspapers in the State. He is fearless and able. He is patriotic to a degree. Every dollar he owns is in this country. He has children and grandchildren here. That he should be hounded as he has been for years by this rival newspaper and those who follow it and fawn upon it and who expect its political aid and support is an outrage and a shame.

Mr. President, since the publication of this article I have received a letter indicating, in the opinion of the writer, that it was not my duty to make a statement about this matter. I want to say that I do not so conceive my duty. A citizen of my State has been assailed here in this Senate, first as being an alien enemy and next as being disloyal. The facts within my knowledge show he is neither. I do not care whether it is Maj. Stahlman or any other citizen of my State; I do not care whether he is a Democrat or a Republican, under similar circumstances; I do not care whether he is white or black, under those circumstances. When I know that such criticism is unwarranted and untrue I will stand by him, whether he be high or whether he be low, whether he be rich or whether he be poor. I represent all the people of my State, in part, and as long as I am here I want the truth to be known and the facts to come out.

Mr. President, I think I have said about all that I want to say. There are several other letters and several short communications and articles here that I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to insert as a part of my remarks in the RECORD in order that the facts may be shown just as they are. I ask unanimous consent to insert them in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). If there is no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Re naturalization of Maj. E. B. Stahlman, Nashville, Tenn.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of the 30th instant, as follows:

"Your wire of the 30th received. My letter to you of the 25th, with inclosed copy of letter to Senator SHIELDS of same date, perfectly clear.

Since then have qualified this letter in no way. This department sent you no wire on the 29th in regard to Stahlman, nor did it send any such wire to any other person, nor did it make any announcement qualifying letter written to you on 25th. Manufactured newspaper articles do not alter my instructions to you. Fail to understand why you should have sent me wire of the 30th. Write and explain."

In reply, I beg to advise that on the morning of January 30 the following appeared in the Nashville Tennessean and American:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 29 (Special).

"It has been ascertained that the Department of Justice has apprised Government officials at Nashville that the status of E. B. Stahlman, of that city, is that of an alien enemy. It is understood this information was given preparatory to the registration of alien enemies, which begins within the next few days."

Also, on the morning of January 30, after the morning paper was on the streets of Nashville, your letter of January 25, with inclosed copy of letter to Senator SHIELDS of same date, came to my office, the concluding paragraph of which is as follows:

"This letter is written to call your attention to the fact that the opinion stated in the inclosed letter is based on facts which were not before this department at the time of the letter written you December 17."

On account of the prominence of Maj. Stahlman, many citizens, and more especially Maj. Stahlman's friends, inquired at this office with regard to the dispatch in the morning paper, and, in justice to Maj. Stahlman, I felt it my duty to wire you.

Respectfully (for and in the absence of the United States attorney),

MARVIN CAMPEN,
Assistant United States Attorney.

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 16, 1918.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I appeal to you as the head of the Department of Justice to afford me an opportunity to be heard in person on the charges, unknown to me, which caused my summary removal as assistant United States attorney for the middle district of Tennessee on the 14th instant—without notice—on the broad and indefinite ground of "for the good of the service." I have endeavored to be scrupulously diligent during my incumbency of nearly two years to take care of the duties of the office, having only in mind "the good of the service," as an examination of my record will disclose.

I am eager to face my accusers, whoever they may be, or to answer truly all questions you may ask me. It looks very much like some one has tried to steal my good name, which, according to the proverb, can not profit them but makes me poor, indeed.

I believe you will agree with me that my previous good record in public and private life entitles me to at least a hearing before my family and myself are finally subjected to the humiliation incident to the summary action taken.

I do not want to be reinstated, but desire, if, after a hearing, the merits of the case warrant it, a modification of the order of removal to the extent that the sting of dishonor may no longer attach to it.

I am confident that a man of your exalted station would not knowingly permit an injustice to the humblest citizen.

I can leave for Washington any day.

Respectfully,

MARVIN CAMPEN.

MARCH 22, 1918.

Mr. MARVIN CAMPEN, Attorney.
Nashville, Tenn.

SIR: I acknowledge receipt of yours of the 16th.

On January 25 this department wrote a letter to United States District Attorney Douglas, at Nashville, inclosing a copy of a letter of same date written by the Attorney General to Senator SHIELDS. These letters stated that certain facts had been presented to this department in regard to the status of Maj. Edward B. Stahlman, and that if the statement of these facts was true Maj. Stahlman was a naturalized American citizen.

In the absence of District Attorney Douglas, and while you were acting in his place, you sent me a wire in his name, on January 30, stating that in a Nashville morning paper of the 29th there appeared a statement to the effect that Maj. Stahlman was an alien enemy. You stated that, in view of the apparent conflict between the department's letter to Douglas and the newspaper article, you wished me to advise you as to Maj. Stahlman's real status. Subsequently, on February 20, you wrote me quite a lengthy letter in regard to the Stahlman case.

I have not the slightest interest in the bitter political controversy prevailing in Nashville. The duty of the employees of this department is to enforce the laws of the United States and, in doing so, to refrain from engaging in controversies of the character referred to. When they permit themselves to become so involved, especially when they become bitter and resentful, they thereby impair their usefulness, reflect upon the administration of the law by this department, and violate its policies.

The wire you sent me on January 30 was entirely improper, as the opinions and instructions of this department are not varied by newspaper articles; and it is hard to conceive of how you could have properly viewed any newspaper publication as creating a conflict which it was necessary for the Attorney General to explain. This proceeding on your part was followed by your letter of February 20, which is so intemperate in its tone and expressions, so indicative of a partisan attitude on your part toward the political controversy referred to, so abounds in expressions of personal ill will, and is so absolutely lacking in that impartiality and dignity which must characterize the office of a United States district attorney, that I sent you a wire stating that for the good of the service you were removed from the position which you then held.

You of course, have copies of your wire of January 30 and your letter of February 20, and I therefore see nothing to be accomplished by discussing their contents. There is no need of a hearing, as you admit being the author of the wire and letter referred to. These documents fully justify the action taken, and for that reason I do not consider it necessary to discuss other acts of yours of which I distinctly disapprove.

Very truly, yours,

T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

JANUARY 25, 1918.

LEE DOUGLAS, Esq., United States Attorney,
Nashville, Tenn.

SIR: Based on the facts stated in your letter of December 3, this department wrote you, under date of December 17, to the effect that Maj. Stahlman, of Nashville, was an alien enemy within the statute.

As you will observe from the inclosed copy of letter addressed this day by the Attorney General to Senator SHIELDS, Maj. Stahlman became a naturalized American citizen by reason of the naturalization of his stepfather in 1856.

This letter is written to call your attention to the fact that the opinion stated in the inclosed letter is based on facts which were not before this department at the time of the letter written you December 17.

Respectfully (for the Attorney General),

(Signed) JOHN LORD O'BRIAN,
Special Assistant to Attorney General.

WALSH SPOKE FOR SHIELDS—INTERRUPTED SHERMAN'S ATTACK ON STAHLMAN FOR SENATOR.

(By John D. Erwin.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4.

The removal of Marven Campen as assistant district attorney at Nashville was brought up on the floor of the Senate Friday afternoon during the debate on the espionage bill.

Senator SHERMAN of Illinois made reference to the case as an evidence that the Department of Justice is not dealing with an impartial hand in the prosecution of persons who have the status of alien enemies, or who are suspected of disloyalty.

After alluding to the fact that Campen was removed apparently for the reason that he was too vigorous in investigating the cases of this kind, particularly the case of E. B. Stahlman, the Nashville publisher, the Illinois Senator made the following statement concerning the Nashville Banner:

"No prosecution has ever been had of the publisher of this newspaper. No prosecution will be had. The evidence would tend to show that he is an alien; that his utterances previous to the declaration of war were friendly to the nations now at war with the United States. Because of this investigation by the assistant district attorney, I think the proof before me shows that he was removed upon the demand of the newspaper publisher, Mr. Stahlman. I only allude to this not for any purpose at this time of doing more than serving a purpose in pointing the moral and adorning the tale of prosecutions in the United States. If it should be proper at some future occasion when the issue is raised it probably will be examined in due form and hearings had if the Senate should regard it as worthy of that investigation."

Senator SHERMAN made a vigorous onslaught on the Attorney General's administration of the laws affecting alien enemies.

While Senator SHERMAN was making his speech E. B. Stahlman, the Nashville publisher, was in the gallery, and he at once got in touch with Senators SHIELDS and MCKELLAR and began a counterattack. Neither of the Tennessee Senators spoke personally in behalf of the Nashville publisher, but at their instance Senator WALSH interrupted Senator SHERMAN to say that his information was that Campen was removed because "he had not been sufficiently vigorous in prosecutions under the espionage act and other acts connected with the war."

When asked where he secured this statement of the reason for Campen's removal, Senator WALSH stated that he had been told these reasons were assigned by Gen. Gregory in the public press. He also stated that he had discussed the case with Senator MCKELLAR.

In reply to Senator WALSH'S statement, Senator SHERMAN suggested that the circumstances connected with this case should be investigated by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The result of bringing up of this case in the Senate will probably be a senatorial investigation and an airing of all the facts in the matter.

Senator SHERMAN made the point that apparently influential German citizens with political prestige and wealth have more influence in these matters than the officials of the Government who are expected to administer the laws.

CITIZENSHIP OF E. B. STAHLMAN.

[The following articles are taken from the Tennessean and American, Nashville Banner, and also reprints from the various newspapers throughout Tennessee relative to the attack by the Tennessean and American on the citizenship of Maj. E. B. Stahlman. The articles are arranged chronologically and the papers from which they were taken are listed:]

[From the Tennessean and American, Jan. 30, 1918.]

E. B. STAHLMAN IS DECLARED TO BE AN ALIEN ENEMY—STATUS OF LOCAL PUBLISHER ESTABLISHED BY UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 29.

It has been ascertained that the Department of Justice has apprised Government officials at Nashville that the status of E. B. Stahlman, of that city, is that of an alien enemy. It is understood this information was given preparatory to the registration of alien enemies, which begins within the next few days.

In the absence of United States District Attorney Lee Douglas, who is away on his vacation, his assistant, Marvin Campen, was informed of the above dispatch, and when questioned with regard thereto, said:

"If Maj. Stahlman's status as an alien enemy is a secret, I have not been made aware of it. According to a communication in our files from the Department of Justice, Maj. Stahlman is an alien enemy within the meaning of the phrase in the statute. This office did not consider Maj. Stahlman's status an item of news and has sought no opportunity to publish the fact. Now, that it comes from Washington as an item of news and since the Department of Justice at Washington is fully aware of his status, I see no impropriety in making this statement.

"This office is not unmindful of the further fact that no newspaper in the United States has been more patriotic and loyal in its utterances, since the declaration of war, than Maj. Stahlman's paper, the Nashville Banner."

[From the Nashville Banner, Jan. 30, 1918.]

MAJ. STAHLMAN IS A CITIZEN.

The article published in the Tennessean and American of this morning stating that Maj E. B. Stahlman is an alien enemy is absolutely false. Maj. Stahlman became a naturalized citizen of the United States on the 20th day of October, 1856, when he was only 12 years of age, through the naturalization of his stepfather.

Mr. Campen, assistant district attorney, has furnished the Banner the copy of a letter from the Attorney General's office in Washington under date of January 25, 1918, stating that the department has been furnished evidence to show that Maj. Stahlman "became a naturalized American citizen by reason of the naturalization of his stepfather in 1856."

Mr. Campen claims he had not received this letter when he gave out the statement published in the Tennessean and American of this morning alleging that Maj. Stahlman was an alien enemy.

Maj. Stahlman has all documentary evidence in his possession and may have occasion to speak on this subject, making clear the attempt to embarrass and injure him.

STEPFATHER OF E. B. STAHLMAN NATURALIZED—ON BASIS OF THIS CLAIM OWNER OF THE NASHVILLE BANNER IS RECLASSIFIED.

Relative to a news story appearing in the Tennessean and American of Wednesday with regard to the citizenship of E. B. Stahlman, a local publisher, Marvin Campen assistant United States district attorney, Wednesday gave out the following statement:

"This morning this office received a letter from the Department of Justice at Washington, which was signed by the same official who for the department had previously advised this office that the status of 'Maj. Stahlman was that of an alien enemy within the meaning of that phrase in the statute.' The letter received to-day from the department states among other things that 'Maj. Stahlman became a naturalized American citizen by reason of the naturalization of his stepfather in 1856' and that this latter opinion was based upon facts which were not before the department at the time of the former opinion."

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

LUKE LEA.

It will be a blessing to Tennessee when Luke Lea, colonel in the National Guard by the generosity and bad judgment of Tom Rye, pitches his tent in France and finds himself where he can no longer be a disturbing factor in Tennessee politics. Thus far his official duties have interfered in no way with his personal and selfish designs. Maj. E. B. Stahlman earned his eternal ingratitude the day he was instrumental in electing him to the Senate, and he has dogged him ever since with villainous persistence, not only to wreak vengeance upon him personally but to destroy the influence of his newspaper. Maj. Stahlman came to this country a lad of 8 and went to work. His father died, and in a humble home in West Virginia he held the household together, made a living, and eventually prospered. There isn't a more patriotic, honorable, or more generous man in the United States. He reared a large family, and his children and their children are a credit to this country. Maj. Stahlman is now an old man, but he has as many friends as Luke Lea has enemies, and no man could wish for more.—Memphis News-Scimitar.

MAJ. STAHLMAN IS LOYAL.

It may be possible that technically Maj. E. B. Stahlman is an "alien enemy." It seems that he came to this country as a youth and his parents were never naturalized. Although during a long life he has participated in our politics and has been one of the most public-spirited citizens in the State, his status remains that which his birth and parentage gave him. But whatever Maj. Stahlman may be called under the law, we in Tennessee know him not as an alien or enemy but as one of most loyal and patriotic citizens. We regret, indeed, that such a fact, if it is a fact, has found the light of publicity, and his friends and neighbors will reassure him of their confidence and endeavor in every way to protect him from a humiliation he does not deserve.—Chattanooga News.

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

[These editorial articles were produced before the libelous misstatement concerning Maj. Stahlman's citizenship had been corrected.]

MAJ. STAHLMAN—CITIZEN.

We do not know who did it, but whoever it was it was a despicable act—reporting Maj. E. B. Stahlman of the Nashville Banner as an alien enemy. Maj. Stahlman was born in Germany, to be sure, and technically he may come under the recent laws enacted with reference to the registration of aliens; but for all that, he is no alien or any other kind of an enemy to the United States. He may have failed to take out all his naturalization papers—if he did it was because he was so much an American citizen that it never occurred to him that it was necessary. We do not remember how long the major has been a citizen of the United States—so long, however, that the memory of most of us runneth not to the contrary. He has been an institution in Tennessee for 40 years to the knowledge of the present writer, and during that time he has never been anything but a loyal American, whatever else he may have been. This newspaper has differed with Maj. Stahlman radically on many questions, especially during the past six or eight years, but it was not because of any pro-Germanism he has displayed. Maj. Stahlman has for the most part during the time of his residence in the United States and his citizenship in Tennessee occupied a high place in the estimation of the political and business communities where he has resided. He has built up a magnificent newspaper property in the Banner and has accumulated other valuable holdings, attesting his patriotic confidence in the country as well as his business sagacity and acumen. If such a thing be possible there should be a popular vocal and written request sent to the President and to the proper authorities at Washington that whatever technical grounds there may be for Maj. Stahlman's registration as an alien enemy, the same be purged and cleared and he be immediately given full and incontestible rights as an American citizen.

One thing the major may be sure of—if they should insist on interning him there will be a whole lot of us who have been quarreling very bitterly with him in a political way who will be delighted to take charge of him and guarantee his good behavior and his patriotic support of the President and the Government until the Kaiser has been licked and the German people are restored to their rights as a free people—for we are sure that is precisely what he would stand for even if he were an alien enemy, which he is not by any manner of means.—Chattanooga Times.

THE MAJOR AND AMERICA.

About the meanest piece of personal spite we know of has been vented by rival publishers against Maj. Stahlman, proprietor of the Nashville Banner.

It is alleged now that the major is technically an alien enemy.

Here are facts:

Maj. Stahlman came with his father to America when he was a boy 8 or 10 years old. His father took out his first papers and died before the second papers were perfected.

Maj. Stahlman struggled along as a boy and as a young man to support his relatives. He secured an education under the greatest difficulties. Against growing competition he forged his way to the front. He has fought thousands of battles through his paper for better citizenship, for a better Nashville, for a better Tennessee, and for a better America, but he has never fought one single battle against the best interests of America.

We have often differed from the Nashville Banner in politics. We have differed from it in other policies, but we have never doubted the soundness of the devotion to America of its owner.

The chief editor of the Nashville Banner for years has been Richard H. Yancey. The very name of Yancey is redolent of the best Americanism and the best patriotism in the South.

And others of equally southern and American tribal names have worked on the Banner.

Maj. Stahlman has done much more for the country of his adoption than some of those who are assailing him.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

TRIBUTE TO MAJ. STAHLMAN.

The citizenship of our distinguished fellow-townsman, Maj. E. B. Stahlman, has at last been settled. The Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to registration as an alien enemy. This decision was based purely upon technical grounds. That no misconstruction of his loyalty or stand in this titanic struggle may occur, we are taking the liberty of featuring the facts as we have them. For once we take a chance without attempting to verify each item, as the high esteem in which he is held forbids any mention of the matter to him at this time. The service flag that floats above the entrance to his paper is large enough and full enough to cover any aspersions that might be cast, while the pay roll, on which still appears the roster of the boys that have gone to the front, is eloquent evidence of the naturalization of his heart, even though his name has never been attached to the papers that legally change the nationality of one who chances to be born in a country that floats other than the Stars and Stripes.

Maj. Stahlman may be an alien. He is not an enemy. Legally he may still belong to the land of his birth and his childhood; morally and in every other way he belongs to the land of his labors and manhood. There may have been some tender memory of those untroubled hours, that never come again in this world, strong enough and full of sentiment enough to have caused him to hope and fight for amicable relations to continue between the land of birth and land of adoption. It would have in most American hearts were they residing in another country when the great war came. Even among those naturalized years ago there was that same desire for friendly relations.

It is not wrong. It is the echo of the inner self that is so interwoven with the higher loves that we can not cast it out. Had Maj. Stahlman come to America as a grown man it would have been his duty in choosing this country as his permanent home. He came, however, as a child. His father died, if we mistake not, before he was subject to full naturalization. We are inclined to believe that when the child grew to manhood he was under the impression that naturalization was not required. At any rate, it was neglected without any intimation or thought that such a day as that of February 2, 1918, would ever come. Such a failure was not a sin of commission. If of omission, there was no ulterior motive back of it. That he is with us, if not of us, all unprejudiced citizens of this city believe. Then, there is proof of it. Men who come to America without sympathy for us and our institutions stay sufficiently long to amass a fortune and then return to the land to which they belong and above which no country ranks in their estimation. With Maj. Stahlman it has been different. Though successful in all his business ventures, until he came to be what is usually called a rich man his investments have been in the city which is and will ever be his home until he moves to the city of shadows, and then the city that he loved and for which he labored so long and so well will shadow the body until the spirit returns to give it life again. He has lived among us, and not even in the evening time of life has there been a call to return to the land of his nativity.

AS A CIVIL LEADER.

The loyalty of Maj. Stahlman can be seen in no better light than to mentally review his labors for the city of Nashville. During his long residence here he has sought to build up the city along lines of permanent rather than inflated growth. Chimerical schemes and hyperbolical representation have always been opposed in the planning of a greater city. In fact, Maj. Stahlman usually did his own building, and only opposed those schemes in which his remarkable foresight saw financial harm. His opposition to the city's investment of a million dollars in the building of the Tennessee Central called down a torrent of maledictions and accusations of a villifying kind upon him and his motives.

Under all he maintained a dignified silence, well knowing that the future would prove the wisdom of his warning. It has. In these and other matters the people of Nashville have learned to listen to his advice and have given him a whole-hearted confidence which has never yet been betrayed. When he remained firm he was accused of stubbornness; when he changed under the light of new facts he was declared a weakling. Whether praised or censured, he has fought the battles of his people here and has spent and been spent in watching after their present and future welfare. The Stahlman building is not a personal monument—the name was the suggestion of other stockholders—but is a monument to his faith in and love for the city he has year after year so materially aided. His time and his paper have not been used in interesting capitalists from other cities. They have been devoted to the people of this immediate section, and the profit arising from them has been invested where others feared to invest until taxes could be decreased. If Nashville ever had a loyal resident, that resident is E. B. Stahlman. If the industries he has founded or aided are the works of alien enemies, it will chill the hatred America feels for them and encourage the hope that when the cruel war is over all that find no asylum elsewhere will seek a refuge where people can overlook a technicality and appreciate a life dedicated to their welfare. No man that now lives or has lived in this city left or can leave a more indelible impression upon it and its citizens than Edward Bushrod Stahlman.

AS A PUBLISHER.

While this and other papers have seen fit to differ with the Banner during the heat of political campaigns, such difference has been founded upon principles of politics and not upon personal antipathy toward its publisher or lack of appreciation of his ability and worth. Recognizing a giant antagonist, the shafts have been all the keener and hurled with double the force. That the influence of that paper is so far-reaching as to discount any candidate unfortunate enough to stand within range of its fire has called forth grilling attacks from other guns of much smaller caliber. When the race is over there was no post bellum feeling, but if victory, double elation against such odds; if defeat, no shame, because the weight was beyond strength of ordinary mind and pen.

We and others, sometimes critics and opponents, in such a time when no fight is on, feel called upon for a confession of the inner and secret pride we feel in a paper so well and favorably known all over the United States. Nor are we unmindful of the fact that when the Banner and its publisher were younger we followed it and its policies with full indorsement. It may be that when we have reached the snow-capped summit of the mountain of existence we, too, may gain visions hitherto hidden, and view as he views, see as he sees, and seek to lead in the same paths of rectitude and reformation. What he indorses seems to him the best. Right is but a chance—it is not your belief or ours—it is that which in time comes true. Right is rather the wish and attempt, not the consummation. Whatever of success attends a life there is no higher goal than to complete it with "a conscience void of offense toward God and man."

AS A CHURCHMAN.

Only those that know Maj. Stahlman in the home and in the pew can fully appreciate the measure of the man. He has yet to have a pastor who does not look to him for advice in every delicate question that touches the spiritual welfare of the cause. Nor does the pastor always know the extent of a charity that is so hidden by silence and lack of ostentation that few dream of its breadth. It is not time to discuss it now. The subject of this sketch would be offended by reference to those deeds of true friendship in hours of need that neither donor nor recipient care to have recalled. In the home the true measure of his worth is known best of all, and while the somber-winged angel has called on more than one occasion and left the chill of its presence there is still the warmth that makes home worth the best of life and the labors it entails.

The church of which he is a member holds him in high esteem. As an official of that church he has injected the same business methods and thoughts which he has successfully practiced in his private affairs. Especially to the aged and poorer ministers he has been tenderly kind and thoughtful. While the friend of great men, he is the better friend of the man in distress or trouble. Only in the great eternity will the full measure of the man be known.

AS AN AMERICAN.

Since long before the Civil War Maj. Stahlman has been a resident of the United States. His hand has guided many an undertaking into the avenues of usefulness and prosperity. Not only to this city but to the South as a whole he has been a friend and helper in the greater undertakings. Not once in the long years that he has been one of us has lip or pen brought forth a disloyal sentence. When the President declared war on his native land there was not a criticism or complaint, but with a loyalty that many critics would do well to pattern he threw the weight of his paper to the cause of democracy and called upon his employees to go to the front, providing pay to their families while they fought for the liberty of the world. If that be alien enmity let us have the fullness! While it is regrettable that this matter should come just at this time it offers a long-desired opportunity for an expression of the high esteem and perfect confidence in which Maj. E. B. Stahlman is held by those of his fellow citizens who appreciate the value of a man worth while.

(NOTE.—The above was written before the Banner published a denial of the story appearing in the Tennessean and American. Our information was based upon the interview of Assistant United States District Attorney Marvin Campen. We sincerely hope that the report is an unintentional error. Whether Maj. Stahlman or Mr. Campen is in error, it goes to show that Maj. Stahlman was acting in good faith and considered himself one of us as well as one with us. This is noted as we go to press, too late to change the main article.—Editor.)

QUESTION OF LOYALTY.

The recent publication made in the Tennessean and American to the effect that Maj. E. B. Stahlman, proprietor of the Banner, is an alien enemy was patently malicious as it was also entirely false. No one at all familiar with the facts and conditions could possibly suppose that it came of any patriotic purpose or desire to serve the country.

The statement was not only published in the Tennessean and American but sent out from that paper's office through the agency of special correspondence to the daily newspapers of the State. It was false in fact and false in the allegation that it had come directly from the Department of Justice at Washington.

The malice involved in such a statement, even if the allegation it made had been technically true, was so obvious, its spite and spleen were so patent on the surface, that the papers to which the alleged news was sent burst into indignant editorial protest at the innate meanness of the spirit it displayed. Both of the daily papers in Memphis, and both of those in Chattanooga, papers that had differed with the Banner in public matters and that had strongly differed among themselves, were a spontaneous unit in denouncing the act as a base departure from all ethical principle. The Chattanooga Times called it a "despicable act"; the Memphis Commercial Appeal said it was "about the meanest piece of personal spite" known. The Memphis News-Scimitar roundly denounced the man supposed to be the chief instigator, and the Chattanooga News showed its plain disapproval of such methods.

These newspaper expressions served to show how the vileness of this surreptitious endeavor to injure Maj. Stahlman personally and to destroy the usefulness and influence of the Banner impressed a disinterested public.

They show, too, that the men behind this endeavor did not have sufficient understanding of the common decencies of life; that their intuitions in any matter of equity or honor were too blunted to make them know that the worse effect of the malicious publication would be in its inevitable reaction on those who perpetrated it.

It was contemptibly little, crass in its petty meanness, the work of those so below the power of a clean perspective as not to know that they were making an exhibit of their malevolence; and beyond all of this, it was wholly false.

The public has known only that this allegation was made and contradicted, but there was a great deal beyond this. It was the result of a conspiracy that has been some time in the hatching, but with a result not looked for by those who placed the serpent eggs in the incubator. It was a continuance, in large part, of the personal enmity that has hounded Maj. Stahlman in late years and was meant to work a personal injury; and still further it involved future schemes of politics characteristic of the schemers, and was a stupid effort to remove Maj. Stahlman and the Banner as impediments to the consummation of the plan.

There is more in the story than the public has supposed. Some space will be required to reveal all the facts that have come into the Banner's possession. The first installment is made in an article printed to-day. It may be continued in subsequent issues. It is asked that these statements of facts be carefully and impartially read and that all they reveal and impart be duly considered.

The Banner is not afraid that its loyalty will be in any way impugned by the base effort made to injure the standing of the owner of the paper and thereby impair its influence. Its record is clear. It has given earnest support to the country and to the administration in the conduct of the war. This a patriotic and discerning public has probably more appreciated than it did some of the hysterical stuff coming from other quarters, sometimes as lacking in intelligence as it was at others saturated with spite and personal motive.

The head of every department of the Banner, in both its editorial rooms and its business office, is a native American of southern colonial stock, who could not by any influence or force of circumstances be induced or compelled to do anything not to the country's interest in this time of stress, and the owner of the paper, whose strong personality and active participation in public affairs has for years made him well known, not only to the Tennessee public, but outside of the State, gives full allegiance to the land in which he has lived as a citizen over 60 years, and in whose destiny his every interest is bound. The Banner's course has been in accord with his wishes and has had his full approval.

This effort to impeach Maj. Stahlman's loyalty the public has readily recognized as a piece of low malevolence and personal spite, having no remote kinship to patriotic endeavor.

INSIDIOUS SCHEME TO INJURE MAJ. STAHLMAN—REVEALED IN FUTILE EFFORTS OF THE GANG TO FORCE PUBLIC PREJUDICE AGAINST HIM AS AN "EMISSARY OF THE KAISER"—WASHINGTON "SPECIAL" IN TENNESSEAN FALSE ON ITS FACE—STATUS AS AMERICAN CITIZEN FULLY ESTABLISHED BY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—CERTIFIED RECORDS FURNISHED.

Anent the insidious attempt of enemies to create the impression in the public mind that I am an "emissary of the German Kaiser," and not a naturalized American citizen, I wish to say that this scheme had its inception in February of last year, and although at the beginning my name was not actually mentioned, every discerning reader could have understood that the scurrilous and contemptible squibs and paragraphs which appeared in the Tennessean and American from time to time were meant to apply to me. In addition to this on more than one occasion my name was used in leading editorials attacking not only my loyalty to the United States but my citizenship.

On Wednesday, January 30, 1918, the Tennessean and American published the following alleged "special":

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 29.

"[Special.]

"It is ascertained that the Department of Justice has apprised Government officials at Nashville that the status of E. B. Stahlman is that of an alien enemy. It is understood this information was given preparatory to the registration of alien enemies, which begins within the next few days."

If this alleged "special" dispatch had been sent out from Washington on the 29th, and the Department of Justice was giving out for publication a ruling in my case "preparatory to the registration of alien enemies," the sender of this "special" would, instead of asserting that the department had declared me an alien enemy, have been obliged to state that on January 25 it had declared me a naturalized American citizen.

As I see it, this "special" was manufactured in Nashville to enable the gang to pull Assistant District Attorney Marvin Campen, a former private secretary of Luke Lea, into their scheme.

In the light of these and other facts known to me, which I do not now care to bring to public attention, I deem it my duty to give the people of Tennessee full information respecting my citizenship, based upon the record in my case.

While in Washington recently, with four prominent newspaper publishers representing the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, I had advices from Nashville that an attempt would probably be made to embarrass me in case I should fail to register as an alien enemy.

I knew I was not an alien enemy, but a loyal and duly naturalized American citizen, and therefore determined to submit the matter to the Hon. T. W. Gregory, the head of the Department of Justice.

After talking the matter over with the Hon. JOHN K. SHIELDS he concurred in that view, saying he would take pleasure in presenting the matter to the Attorney General for me.

I therefore prepared and submitted to Senator SHIELDS the following statement and exhibit, accompanied by a letter addressed to the Senator:

STATEMENT OF EDWARD B. STAHLMAN.

My father, Frederick Stahlman, and mother, Christiana Lange, were married in Mecklenburg, Germany, in the year 1834.

I, Edward B. Stahlman, was their fourth child, born in Mecklenburg, Germany, on the 2d of September, 1844.

My father and mother, with all of their children, left Germany to become citizens of the United States, reaching West Union, in the county of Doddridge, State of Virginia, in October, 1853, in which county and State they contemplated establishing their residence.

In the early spring of 1854 my father was taken seriously ill. He remained so, growing worse from month to month, until he died, in January, 1855.

Mr. Lewis Harnish, a former resident of Mecklenburg, and who had as I now remember, known my father and mother in Germany, came to the United States and located at West Union, in the county of Doddridge, State of Virginia, in 1851.

The kindly interest of Mr. Lewis Harnish in my father, mother, and their children's welfare grew on account of the distress incident to my father's prolonged illness and final death, cementing the bond of friendship between Mr. Harnish and my mother and children, so that in December, 1855, within 11 months after the death of my father, Mr. Lewis Harnish and my mother were married.

On the 24th day of October, 1853, Lewis Harnish declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and renounced forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty whatever, and particularly to the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, which same appears of record in law order book No. 1, at page 292, of the office of the circuit court of Doddridge County.

On the 20th day of October, 1856, "said Lewis Harnish came into court and declared on oath that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and that he doth absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty whatever, and particularly to the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, of whom he was a former subject, whereupon the said Lewis Harnish is admitted a citizen of the United States of America," as shown by record of the circuit court of Doddridge County, Va., in law order book No. 2, at page 44, of the office of said county court clerk. The original copy of said record, certified by L. E. Kiger, clerk of said court, is herewith exhibited to the Department of Justice, and a copy of same attached hereto as Exhibit A.

At the time, i. e., October 20, 1856, when Lewis Harnish was admitted a citizen of the United States, he was my stepfather, and I was only 12 years of age.

Decisions innumerable, as well as acts of Congress, show that my citizenship was established on October 20, 1856, when Lewis Harnish, the husband of my mother, was admitted a citizen of the United States, which is fully confirmed not only by various court decisions but by the Official Bulletin of Wednesday, January 2, 1918, which, on page 10, paragraph 8, makes the following explicit declaration:

"If the second or subsequent husband of an alien widow becomes naturalized as an American citizen, the minor children of such widow residing permanently in the United States at the time of the naturalization of such husband are thereby naturalized as American citizens."

I was not only "residing permanently in the United States at the time," but have been residing in the United States ever since, and during the last 52 years of that time have lived permanently and continuously at Nashville, in the State of Tennessee, where I have been prominently and actively engaged in business pursuits and for the last quarter of a century have, as sole owner and publisher, defined the policy of the Daily Nashville Banner, the columns of which have made my career and aim in life an open book.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWARD B. STAHLMAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 25, 1918.

EXHIBIT "A" TO STATEMENT.

Lewis Harnish, a native of Mecklenburg and a subject of the grand duke thereof, this day applied to the court to be admitted a citizen of the United States, and thereupon the said Lewis Harnish exhibited to the court a transcript of the record of this court, declaring his intention, which transcript is in the words and figures following, to wit:

Virginia, Doddridge County circuit court, fall term, 1853. Be it remembered that heretofore, to wit:

At a circuit held for the county aforesaid at the courthouse, said county, on the 24th day of October, in the year 1853, Lewis Harnish, a native of Germany, made the following report of himself to the said court:

That he arrived in the United States of America from Germany in the year 1851, the place of his nativity; that he is about 28 years of age, and that it is his intention to become a citizen of the United States of America. Thereupon the said Lewis Harnish came into court and made oath on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God that it is his bona fide intention to become a citizen of the United States of America and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty whatever, and particularly to the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg.

Virginia, Doddridge County, to wit:

Francis D. Hickman, clerk of the circuit court of Doddridge County, does hereby certify that the foregoing is a true transcript taken from the record of the said court:

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said court at the courthouse of said county, this 24th day of October, 1853.

Testa:

FRANCIS D. HICKMAN,
Clerk.

And it being proven to the satisfaction of the court by the evidence of William Huffman and John Wanstreet, who were examined on oath as witnesses, that the said Lewis Harnish has constantly resided in the United States for the last five years and within this State for more than one year at least, and that during that time he has behaved himself as a man of good moral character attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same, whereupon the said Lewis Harnish came into court and declared on oath that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and that he doth absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty whatever, and particularly to the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, of whom he was a former subject, whereupon the said Lewis Harnish is admitted a citizen of the United States of America.

"STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
"Doddridge County, to wit:

"I, L. E. Kiger, clerk of the circuit court of Doddridge County, W. Va., do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the order admitting Lewis Harnish to citizenship in the United States of America, in the circuit court of Doddridge County, W. Va., on the 20th day of October, 1856, of which the same appears of record in law order book No. 2, at page 44, in my said office.

"Given under my hand and the official seal of said court this 20th day of December, 1917.

"L. E. KIGER, Clerk.

LETTER TO SENATOR SHIELDS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 25, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHIELDS: I am handing you herewith a brief statement covering the facts and records relating to my citizenship. I have attached a true and correct copy of the record of the clerk of the circuit court of Doddridge County, W. Va., to my statement as an exhibit, and am handing you the original certificate to satisfy the department of the genuineness of the copy. I ask to have this original paper returned to me, or a certified copy thereof furnished me.

I make no reference in my statement to the declaration of my desire to become a citizen of the United States filed by me in the office of the circuit-court clerk of Davidson County, Tenn., on the 5th of July, 1867, since that has no bearing on my case now.

The circumstances under which this declaration was made by me has been explained to you. When made I was a young man, many hundred miles from my home and relatives in Virginia. I did not then know what rights my stepfather's naturalization bore on my citizenship. I lived in Tennessee, was anxious to vote, and finding that a mere declaration of my intention to become a citizen of the United States under the act of the Tennessee General Assembly passed in 1866–67 would give me the right, I made my declaration. It was during the reconstruction period, just after the Civil War, when there was a very heated campaign on to determine whether the substantial white citizens of the State should be allowed to assume control of its affairs or the carpetbaggers, aided by the negroes, should be permitted to continue in power.

I felt so keenly an interest in the success of the former that I lost no time in seeking to qualify myself as a voter by a method so simple, and took that course rather than search over the records of a distant State to find whether or not my stepfather had become a naturalized citizen, and whether, even if he had, it would entitle me at that time to vote in Tennessee.

You know what took place in New York last April. You, Senator MCKELLAR, and Representative BYRNS know whom I suspected of the base attempt to harass and humiliate me by imprisonment, if they could, even though it were only one night, a day, or even an hour.

These men are still at work. They have not let up, and I ask that you to-day please confer with the Attorney General and determine whether or not he will take steps to compel the officials connected with his department at Nashville to cease playing into the hands of the politically corrupt creatures who are seeking to harass me.

I would not gratify the curiosity of these scoundrels by showing them any of my records or papers. I have lived too long in the city of Nashville, have been too thoroughly identified with all that tended to promote its welfare, to dance attendance to men who, through disappointment in politics and malice, are seeking to annoy and destroy me.

If the Attorney General is not entirely satisfied with the character of the evidence I furnish in this statement, he will very greatly oblige me by sending a special agent to West Union, Doddridge County, about 50 miles east of Parkersburg, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, where he will be able to find in the West Union cemetery a monument erected under my direction over the grave of my father, showing that he died in January, 1855.

This agent will then, by going to the office of the county-court clerk, find a record of the license issued in December, 1855, authorizing the marriage of Lewis Harnish and my mother, and by going to the office of the circuit-court clerk he will find court record showing that Lewis Harnish was admitted to full citizenship of the United States on the 20th of October, 1856.

I am ready to meet all expenses incurred in making this further investigation, if necessary. I desire a surcease of the intolerable attempts of the unscrupulous gang that is seeking to annoy me, and as a citizen of the United States I feel that I have a right to ask that such protection shall be vouchsafed to me.

Only yesterday I received a letter strongly indicating that an attempt may be made to give me trouble if I fail to register within the next 10 days as an alien enemy, which I am not.

Can it be possible that the employees of the Department of Justice at Nashville will continue to lend their official sanction to such an attempt as that?

I sincerely trust that the Attorney General will see his way clear to take prompt and positive steps to stop my enemies from annoying me any further, or at least stop the officials of the department in Nashville from giving any countenance or support to these enemies.

Very sincerely, yours,

E. B. STAHLMAN.

Senator SHIELDS immediately upon the receipt of the foregoing papers from me called upon the Attorney General, receiving later the following letter respecting my claims to citizenship and the ruling of the Department of Justice thereon:

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OPINION.

"OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
"Washington, D. C., January 25, 1918.

"Hon. JOHN KNIGHT SHIELDS,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR SENATOR SHIELDS: I have carefully considered the documents submitted by you in respect to the citizenship of Edward B. Stahlman, of Nashville, Tenn., and the necessity of his registering as a German alien enemy.

"From these documents it appears that Edward B. Stahlman was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, September 2, 1844, the son of Frederick Stahlman and Christiana Stahlman (born Christiana Lange), German subjects, who were married in Mecklenburg, Germany, in the year 1834; that he was brought to the United States in October, 1853, by his father and mother, who settled in Doddridge County, Va.; that his father, Frederick Stahlman, died in the United States in January, 1855; that his mother, Christiana Stahlman, after the death of her husband, Frederick Stahlman, and in December, 1855, was married in the United States to Mr. Lewis Harnish, then a German alien; that on October 20, 1856, Lewis Harnish completed his naturalization as an American citizen and was, by the circuit court of Doddridge County, Va. (now West Virginia), duly admitted a citizen of the United States of America; that at the time of the naturalization and admission of Lewis Harnish, stepfather of Edward B. Stahlman, as an American citizen, the mother of Edward B. Stahlman was (so far as appears) living in the United States, and her son, Edward B. Stahlman, was a minor of the age of 12 years, then permanently residing or dwelling within the United States; that Edward B. Stahlman has since continued to reside permanently in the United States; and that he has not expatriated himself.

"If the facts be as stated, Mr. Edward B. Stahlman became naturalized as an American citizen on October 20, 1856, by the naturalization on that date of his stepfather, and is not required to register in the forthcoming registration of German alien enemies. His subsequent filing of a declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States is to be regarded merely as cumulative evidence of election of United States citizenship, as he was already a citizen of the United States by the naturalization of his stepfather, and was none the less so because he may at the time of filing his declaration of intention have entertained unfounded doubts on the subject.

"Respectfully,

"T. W. GREGORY,
"Attorney General."

"Inclosures: Letter January 25, addressed to Senator Shields by E. B. Stahlman; copy naturalization record of Virginia (Doddridge County) circuit court."

When on the morning of January 30 the Tennessean and American on the top of its front page and in box form, under headlines, stated "E. B. Stahlman is declared to be an alien enemy—Status of local publisher established by United States Department of Justice," I immediately telegraphed Senator SHIELDS, transmitting the full text of the article and asking him to at once ascertain if the department had at any time ruled that I was an alien enemy; and if so, please ascertain when and upon what representation this ruling was made and by whom the statement was made to the department upon which it had made its ruling.

I wired Senator MCKELLAR and Representative BYRNS also, so that in case of the absence of either the matter would have prompt attention from the other. I received responses from all three to the same effect, but it is not necessary to quote from either, since the honorable Attorney General, with the apparent purpose to put a quietus on this matter and without any request from me, sent direct to me the following telegram:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30—9.30 p. m.

Maj. E. B. STAHLMAN,
Nashville, Tenn.:

On December 3 last reported to this department by district attorney at Nashville that you were born in Germany and not naturalized. On this information I wrote district attorney on December 17 that you were within the statutory definition of an alien enemy. On January 25 facts presented to me showed that you came to United States as a child; that your father died in 1855; that your mother married again; that subsequently her second husband was naturalized while you were still a child; that you have lived in the United States since you originally came here; and that you have not expatriated yourself. On these facts I held that you became an American citizen through naturalization of your stepfather, and that you were not required to register as an alien enemy. On the same day I wrote United States Attorney Douglas of the conclusion reached and the facts and reasons on which it was based, stating to him that these facts were not before the department at the time I wrote him on December 17. Since January 25 this department has given nothing varying in the slightest the conclusion announced on January 25. My letter to Douglas, dated January 25, seems to have been mailed on January 26.

T. W. GREGORY, Attorney General.

According to the statement of Assistant District Attorney Marvin Campen, the letter from the Department of Justice, dated January 25, ruling that I was a naturalized American citizen, was not received by him until Wednesday morning, January 30, the day following the information given by him to the Tennessean and American, alleging that I was classed as an alien enemy.

I have no wish to impugn Mr Campen's statement, but it appears somewhat strange that a letter dated January 25 and mailed in Washington January 26 should not have reached Nashville until the morning of January 30, when I, on my return home, did not leave Washington until the evening of January 27 and, after being delayed 12 hours by a collision en route, thereby missing two train connections, was able and did reach Nashville at 8.40 o'clock on the morning of January 29, bringing with me a copy of the Attorney General's letter to Senator SHIELDS, which was handed to me in Washington on the morning of January 26, 28 hours before my departure from Washington City on January 27.

There are a number of important facts bearing on the attempt of the gang to embarrass and destroy me, which it is not necessary to bring to the attention of the public at this time. The foregoing record and statement will answer for the present. It will, at least, be sufficient to sorely disappoint and thwart the aim of my enemies and give a corresponding degree of comfort and pleasure to my friends.

E. B. STAHLMAN.

[Editorial, Banner, Feb. 4.]

MECKLENBURG.

Some of those who have endeavored to malign Maj. E. B. Stahlman and prejudice him with the Tennessee public because of his birth in Germany more than 70 years ago, have called him an "emissary of the Kaiser," a "subject of the Kaiser," and "a born subject of the Kaiser, for whom he has never foresworn allegiance."

As told in the article published on the front page of Sunday's Banner, Maj. Stahlman has been a naturalized American since 1856, and under all law and right is as much a citizen of this country as if he were born here, but without regard to that important fact he was not born a subject of the Kaiser and none of his ancestors ever owed such allegiance. It was ignorance of history that ever led his traducers, as misinformed as they were malicious, to such an allegation.

Maj. Stahlman was born in the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin in 1844 and came to America with his parents nine years later. The German Empire, as now known, was not formed until 1871. There was no Deutches Kaiser, otherwise German Emperor, until 27 years after Maj. Stahlman was born, and the Hohenzollern kings of Prussia, who became German emperors when the empire was formed at Versailles, near Paris, after the conclusion of the Franco-Prussian War, in 1871, never had any sort of dominion over Mecklenburg before that date. Maj. Stahlman was then an American, living in Nashville.

If Maj. Stahlman had never been naturalized, as his enemies endeavored to make it appear, it would have been only in a constructive sense that he was a subject of the Kaiser, since he left Germany nearly 20 years before there was a Kaiser and before the present German Empire had any existence.

Maj. Stahlman's father was a subject of Grand Duke Friedrich Franz III of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and had no other sovereign. The Grand Duchy still exists, but it is now a State of the German Empire, with two members of the Bundesrat and six deputies in the Reichstag, compared to Prussia's 17 members of the Bundesrat and 236 members of the Reichstag. The total membership of the Reichstag is 397.

With the Prussian king as emperor and such a large preponderance of Prussians in the imperial legislative body, the whole of Germany is now pretty well Prussianized, but it was not so when Maj. Stahlman was born. Mecklenburg was then independent. It was allied with other German States in a loose "bund," or confederation, mainly for commercial purposes, in which the Emperor of Austria had a nominal prestige but exercised no sovereign authority.

Mecklenburg-Schwerin and Mecklenburg-Strelitz, formerly united, are two States in the extreme north of Germany, with a hardy population, almost wholly Protestant in religion. The University of Rostock is in Mecklenburg, and there are 1,235 elementary schools, with about 100,000 pupils.

MARVIN CAMPEN EXPLAINS STATUS OF E. B. STAHLMAN—ASSISTANT DISTRICT ATTORNEY ASSERTS PUBLISHER WAS DECLARED AN ALIEN ENEMY—RULING WAS CHANGED IN SUBSEQUENT ORDER—JUSTIFIES FORMER INTERVIEWS AND DENOUNCES ACCUSATION OF FALSEHOOD.

Marvin Campen, assistant United States district attorney, Sunday gave out the following statement relative to the E. B. Stahlman naturalization matter:

"Publicity does not appeal to me, and I desire no controversy with an aged man like Maj. Stahlman, but can not let his implied accusation of falsehood against me, relative to the receipt by me of the letter from the Department of Justice, dated January 25, 1918, on the morning of January 30, go unnoticed simply because of his years and his sensitiveness, perhaps largely due thereto. His reflection on me will go for naught with those who know me, and personally I do not care what he thinks of me. I am not and have not been interested in the major's status, because if the past is any criterion for the future the result of determining the major's status, whether citizen or alien, will be the same to our country.

"From the major's statement in Sunday's Banner it appears that his two letters to Senator SHIELDS, furnishing additional information, were dated January 25, 1918, and that Senator SHIELDS transmitted the documents to the Attorney General the same day, and the reply of the Attorney General to Senator SHIELDS was dated the same day—January 25—and the department's letter to the district attorney at Nashville was dated the same day. The Attorney General's telegram of January 30 to Maj. Stahlman states, 'My letter to Douglas, dated January 25, seems to have been mailed on January 26.'

"It happens not infrequently that mail is received from the Department of Justice, as well as other departments at Washington, at the district attorney's office a week or more after the date on the letterhead. I repeat most emphatically that the letter in question did not come to my office until the morning of January 30.

"Maj. Stahlman further attempts to impugn my motives by reference to the fact that I was formerly private secretary to Col. Lea. He could have stated also that I was formerly a private secretary to Senator SHIELDS. Both Col. Lea and Senator SHIELDS had enough confidence in me to indorse me for the position I now hold without my soliciting either of them for the indorsement and without my being an applicant.

"Many of Maj. Stahlman's warmest friends have commented on the fairness to him of my statement of the night of January 29.

"It was up to me to tell the truth or a lie, and I preferred the truth, as it appeared in the files at that time, although I might have relied on the precedent of St. Peter, as did the Major on one occasion, when he was denounced as a liar and a thief by no less a personage than a distinguished United States Senator in the course of a senatorial investigation involving the Major, when the Major received over $100,000 which Congress thought was going to supernumerary ministers of the Methodist Church.

"I alone am responsible for my statements, and the Major's veiled insinuations and his wrathful threats, as I have been informed, to 'get my official scalp' do not intimidate me. The fact remains that at least from December 17, 1917, to January 25, 1918, the Major's status with the Department of Justice was that of an alien enemy within the meaning of that phrase in the statute; and the further fact remains that the Major was so uncertain of his status that he filed a declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States long after the naturalization of his stepfather in 1856.

"It has been noticeable in recent years that the Major vents his spleen without measure on those who incur his displeasure in the smallest particular, and then seeks refuge and sympathy in his old age when a victim of his wrath speaks a word in his own behalf.

"This ceases the matter so far as I am concerned."

MAJ. E. B. STAHLMAN NOT AFTER "KIDS."

Maj. Stahlman, referring to the article in the Tennessean and American of this morning, headed "Marvin Campen Explains," says:

"I am sorry Mr. Campen is allowing himself to play 'the goat' for the conspirators higher up.

"It's a mighty poor start in life for a young man to make.

"'Dollars to doughnuts,' Campen didn't even write his alleged interview, at any rate, a large portion of it was inspired by another.

"I am not after 'kids,' but full-grown 'bucks,' and have at least two of them already lassoed through records in my possession."

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

About the silliest bit of alleged news seen in a long time is that that by some hook or crook got into the papers to the effect that Maj. E. B. Stahlman, the owner of the Nashville Banner and one of the enterprising and progressive citizens of Nashville, was an "alien enemy."

At first blush it strikes one as being too silly to merit the slightest notice. And it deserves none except as an illustration of how silly some persons are when it comes to gathering news worth printing. In some way this got into print and may have been read with some surprise by some who may not know Maj. Stahlman, or know of him. Of either of these classes there are few.

The major is a native of Germany, born there seventy-odd years ago. When 9 years old he came to this country and into the State of Virginia. When less than 21 he came to Tennessee, and his home has been here since 1863. He has not been a dead or unknown one in any sense. In business he has been a live wire, and has succeeded to a very large extent. He is one of the live men of the State capital. He is personally known to thousands of Tennesseeans, and there are few in the State who read newspapers who don't know of him.

In respect to being an "enemy alien," there is not a paper in the State or in the country that has stood more loyally to the administration than has the Nashville Banner, in which Maj. Stahlman owns at least a controlling amount of stock.

As already stated, Maj. Stahlman is a German by birth, but most of his life has been spent in Tennessee, and, like thousands of others so born, he is intensely loyal to the land to which his parents brought him when he was a boy not yet in his teens. He is a loyal American, a loyal Tennesseean, and a leading citizen. Whoever gave publicity to the assumption that Maj. Stahlman was an alien enemy showed his ignorance and exposed his silliness.

Now, the Department of Justice at Washington has revised its ruling on the status of Maj. Stahlman as an "enemy alien." The same officials of that department who first passed upon his status have now faced about and declare, among other things, "that Maj. Stahlman became a naturalized American citizen by reason of the naturalization of his stepfather in 1856, this latter opinion being based upon facts not before the department at the time of the former (and contrary) opinion."

Truth and justice have again come into their own. (Knoxville Journal and Tribune.)

LUKE'S LATEST.

To the EDITOR OF THE BANNER.

I think Luke had about despaired of ever downing the major. But lately a new vision came over him. It comes with poor grace for a man like Luke to try to sick the Government on a man like Stahlman, a man who has for 40 years fought both with his pen and pocketbook for the very best of the State and Nation. Get up some other razzle, Luke.

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

So far as our information goes there has been no newspaper in the United States more patriotic than the Nashville Banner. Maj. E. B. Stahlman, owner and publisher, while a German by birth, has spent his entire life in this country and has contributed of his talents to the upbuilding of the Government and the community in which he lives. If memory serves us right, we believe the dirty trick against Mr. Stahlman emanated with Col. Luke Lea. It's a pity that we have not more men of Stahlman's character and manhood, and fewer like those who would destroy the world to gain political advantage. Nashville, Tennessee, and the South will resent such treachery and disgraceful political tactics by Maj. Stahlman's personal enemies. We believe, and thousands of people all over the South—yes, throughout the United States—believe that a truer citizen never lived than Stahlman.—South Pittsburg Hustler.

WASTED TALENTS.

The enterprising investigator who delved in the dusty files and tomes of time back to "befo' de war" to establish the status of Maj. E. B. Stahlman, owner of the Nashville Banner, as that of an "alien enemy," was wasting his young ambition and talents as a sleuth at a time when there is so great demand and opportunity in this field of endeavor. Even though the major was not born in the United States, he must have been acclimated before the investigator was born, and, at any rate, the statute of limitations bars any cloud of title on a citizenship that dates before the Civil War, when the United States themselves were new born. The Sherlock Holmes who opened on this cold trail of the veteran Nashville publisher was no doubt doing a little private sleuthing to his personal account under guise of patriotism, which also covers a multitude of sins.

Maj. Stahlman has a large circle of friends, not only in Tennessee but throughout the South, who have never lost confidence in him or even slightly doubted his loyalty to the United States. His Nashville Banner is one of the leading and most influential newspapers in the South, and as its publisher the major can usually be found espousing the things that stand for the good of his city, State, and Nation.—Knoxville Sentinel.

FORUM OF THE PEOPLE.

MAJ. STAHLMAN AS AN ALIEN.

To the EDITOR OF THE BANNER:

I just can not remain silent. Of all the nasty, mean, low-down, contemptible things of which Luke Lea has been guilty, this last one assailing the patriotism and citizenship of Maj. E. B. Stahlman takes the rag off the bush. I have watched with careful scrutiny the acts and influence of these two men in the politics of the State, especially as regards the prohibition issue, and can say with confidence that Maj. Stahlman has all the time been a straightforward, honest, and sincere advocate of State-wide, bone-dry, and national prohibition, and has labored ably and faithfully without the shadow of a turning for their adoption by the State and Nation and has grandly won the fight. I doubt very much if any man or any paper in the State has done as much for prohibition as Maj. Stahlman and the Banner have so wisely and effectively done. I have not now sufficient words to describe his lofty efforts, which will redound to the glory and for the comfort and happiness of the women and children for all time to come. In contrast, what am I forced to say of Luke Lea? I verily believe with all my heart he is one of the most contemptible hypocrites that ever disgraced the State. For it is a fact which everybody knows, or ought to know, when a bill was brought before the legislature for passage into a law Luke Lea was there with Hilary Howse, Crump, his satanic majesty, and the whisky force of the State laboring with all his might to effect its defeat. While he was posing publicly as a prohibitionist he was doing all he could secretly against the passage of these laws. This is his history given by the papers of the State. What are the people to think of such a man as this? Now he is doing all he can to traduce the loyalty and citizenship of a man who since early boyhood had to labor in his adopted State for his own support and that of his widowed mother, and all the time since manhood has been his estate he has exhibited a liberality for the church and community in which he lived not excelled by many men of his day and generation. Such is the character of Maj. Stahlman right at and all around his door and in all the homes of Nashville. Luke Lea's attack will fall flat and wide of his mark and will be characterized by the best men of the State as a piece of contemptible littleness.

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

A report has been circulated in Tennessee that Maj. E. B. Stahlman, owner of the Nashville Banner, is an alien enemy. It is a false report and does a loyal American citizen a grievous injustice.

Maj. Stahlman was born in Germany, but came to this country when he was a child. In 1856, when he was only 12 years of age, he became a naturalized citizen through the naturalization of his stepfather. And he has been a citizen of the kind and character of which America can not have too many. He began at the bottom in the struggle for existence, and by dint of his own efforts he has achieved a success in which men with much better earlier opportunities could find great satisfaction. If he has profited by coming to America, that part of America in which he lives and moves and has his being has been benefited by his presence here. He has been a foremost figure in the public-spirited citizenship of Nashville for 30 or 40 years, and there are few people in Tennessee who do not know that he is an asset to that city.

The Nashville Banner is one of the leading newspapers of the country. It is also one of the most thoroughly and intelligently patriotic newspapers of the country. No paper anywhere has given the Government and its war efforts more loyal and whole-hearted support. No paper anywhere has addressed itself more ably and earnestly to the duty of holding up the hands of the President and the administration at Washington.

Maj. Stahlman is an American citizen in whom there is no taint of alienism. Any attempt to embarrass and injure him by raising a question as to his loyalty is despicable and will fail. (Bristol Herald-Courier.)

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

AN ABSURDITY.

The idea of classifying Maj. E. B. Stahlman as an alien enemy seems absurd to those who for nearly 40 years have known him to be a true and loyal friend to this, the country of his adoption. (Rogersville Star.)

GAME OF SNEAK.

The story told of Maj. E. B. Stahlman being an alien enemy seems to have been concocted by an enemy who knows how to play the game of sneak. (Knoxville Journal and Tribune.)

HIS HYPOCRISY PUNCTURED.

The efforts of the Tennesseean to make out that Maj. E. B. Stahlman, editor and owner of the Nashville Banner, is an alien enemy fell flat and only resulted in discredit to the Tennesseean, as it heartily deserved.

It would seem that Luke Lea would learn after a while that he can do nothing with major and be content to get along without having his hypocrisy punctured as often as it has been in the past. (Crossville Chronicle.)

NARROW PIECE OF WORK.

The effort to make Maj. E. B. Stahlman, owner of the Nashville Banner, an alien enemy of the United States has fallen very, very flat, and those responsible for this narrow piece of work do not even look like 30 cents. This is a very serious matter, under present conditions, and ought not to rest with Maj. Stahlman's elaborate and manly explanation. The instigator ought to be brought to strict account by the Federal Government. This is the only way to put a stop to such meddlers. (Lawrence Union.)

APPRECIATES THE BANNER.

CAMDEN, TENN., February 6, 1918.

To the EDITOR OF THE BANNER:

For some time I have read with pleasure your splendid editorials on the war that is now raging in Europe. I have from time to time observed your position, and must say that for patriotism and patriotic sentiments you are unexcelled, the Tennesseean notwithstanding.

The article last night, "The war has begun," should be read by all American citizens. It breathes the true spirit of the times. For patriotism this article goes beyond anything that I have read on the question. It is strange, indeed, with all you have said and the positions you have taken, that the Nashville Tennesseean would take the little, contemptible position that it has recently, that it might reflect on Maj. Stahlman as an American citizen. This is no time for dissension, but is the hour for all who are true Americans to stand together. The American citizen is going to be looked upon after this war with more respect than ever before. He is going to be the balance of power that forever destroys the spirit of conquest that has flourished for so long in the land of Germany. May we realize his worth and all stand together in this hour of war, in which our Nation is to play the winning part.

America has a tradition which swells every American citizen's heart with pride. This must and will be upheld in this war. Your paper does its part well in its editorials along this line, and its expressions from time to time, it seems to me, do much to help win this war.

C. N. FRAZIER.

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

A PATENTLY INSIDIOUS EFFORT.

A few days ago there appeared in the Tennesseean an alleged special, stating that the status of Maj. E. B. Stahlman was that of an alien enemy. This was followed by another special in which the status of Maj. Stahlman was revised, and stating that he became a naturalized citizen through the naturalization of his stepfather.

Any intelligent citizen knows that the circulation of a report that Maj. Stahlman was an alien enemy was not actuated by any patriotic motives or desire to serve the country, but was patently an insidious effort to injure Maj. Stahlman and impair the influence of his paper, the Nashville Banner. This attempt to discredit and injure as loyal and patriotic citizen as Maj. Stahlman has fallen decidedly flat and has been denounced by the press throughout the State.

Maj. Stahlman was born in Germany, but came to this country when a child, and was naturalized in 1856, when 12 years of age, through the naturalization of his stepfather. He has been a citizen of Nashville for 30 or 40 years, and is one of the foremost figures in the public-spirited citizenship of the South.

The Banner is one of the leading papers of the country, thoroughly and intelligently patriotic, and has given the Government loyal and whole-hearted support in its war efforts. No paper anywhere has more ably and earnestly stood by the President and assisted the administration at Washington. (Marshall Gazette.)

ENVY, MALICE, SPITE.

Maj. E. B. Stahlman is not an alien enemy. Envy, malice, and spite have caused many uncalled-for attacks on Mr. Stahlman, and but shows the smallness and mediocrity of the man who does it. Maj. Stahlman is a citizen of the United States and a patriotic one. (Murfreesboro Home Journal.)

PERSONAL SPLEEN.

The efforts to have Maj. E. B Stahlman declared an alien enemy were contemptible, miserably small, and bore the stamp of personal spleen. To our way of thinking there is not a more loyal American living than Maj. Stahman. Certain it is that Tennessee and Nashville can claim no other citizen who does more for his country, his State, or his city. There is no movement for good that he is not an active agent and despite his advanced age his energies are great and his time, his talents, and his money are lavishly given for every worthy object and every laudable undertaking. He supports men and measures that stand for the right as he sees it and his actions are stimulated by no hope of reward. He seems to have incurred the everlasting displeasure of a class of men who stop at nothing that will harass him, and yet he has done more for the State and its people than a field full of those small-bore, selfish individuals. One of the annoying features of this war is that it gives the opportunity for some men to display their counterfeit patriotism that on some occasions is difficult to distinguish from the real. Maj. Stahlman has friends, not in one section, but over all of Tennessee, who believe in him, who believe in his honesty and in his integrity, and the contemptible efforts of a gang to harass and embarrass him only cements that friendship the stronger. WHAT ALABAMA NEWSPAPERS SAY.

NOT AN ALIEN.

December 3 last report was made by the district attorney at Nashville to the Department of Justice at Washington that Maj. E. B. Stahlman, owner of the Nashville Banner, was a native of Germany and not naturalized. The Attorney General then issued order that the major be enrolled as an alien enemy. The publication of the news of this finding caused a sensation in Tennessee, where Maj. Stahlman is a considerable figure in business and political life. The major set to work, however, and seems to have had no difficulty in showing that as he came to this country as a child, and was under the tutelage of a stepfather who was naturalized he himself did not need to be naturalized. Accordingly, January 30 the Attorney General writes: "On these facts I hold that you became an American citizen through the naturalization of your stepfather, and that you were not required to register as an alien enemy." Maj. Stahlman is widely known throughout the South, in which quarter he has been prominent for 50 years or more. (Mobile Register.)

The effort of some Tennessee politicians for personal reasons to discredit Maj. E. B. Stahlman, the able editor of the Nashville Banner, as a German alien, deserves the strongest condemnation. It shows to what depths men will go to accomplish their purposes. But the major got back at them all right; and his friends all over the South, even those who do not know him personally, will rejoice with him. (Florence (Ala.) Times.)

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

MAJ. E. B. STAHLMAN.

It is to be regretted that the loyalty of such a man as E. B. Stahlman, after his long, useful, patriotic, and loyal citizenship in Tennessee, should be called in question; for even if he had not been, technically, naturalized, everybody knows that he considered himself a citizen of Tennessee and of Nashville, and everybody so treated him, for he has been a voter in that city for years. As a matter of fact, however, Maj. Stahlman has shown beyond any doubt that he is a naturalized citizen, and the Department of Justice at Washington has passed on that question and forever set it at rest. It must be apparent that there is some one or more of Maj. Stahlman's personal enemies behind the effort to injure if not destroy him, and that they were not actuated by any good motive or purpose to serve the best interest of the country but, on the contrary, were influenced by personal spleen and were guilty of bad citizenship in attempting at this time to injure a man and an enterprise contributing their best energies to the country's needs. No man who reads the Nashville Banner can get the idea that it is being used other than for the national welfare.

We are not advised as to who or what interest is behind this unjust attack on Maj. Stahlman, but we see no reason why he should not expose those who would, if they could, destroy him; for whoever they are, if prompted by personal spleen or other bad motive, they are unworthy citizens and deserve to be watched. (Clarksville Leaf-Chronicle.)

A BIG STICK.

His pursuers have learned that Maj. E. B. Stahlman carries a big stick and is not averse upon occasion to using it. (Knoxville Journal and Tribune.)

HE STANDS FOR THE RIGHT.

The men who are trying to discredit Maj. Stahlman by calling attention to his citizenship had best pluck the beam from their own eyes. Whatever be said of his citizenship—and he has proven that to the satisfaction of all—he stands for the right. He makes mistakes, but he is not a petty politician. To say the least, he is bigger than the men who are trying to besmirch his character. (Watertown Herald.)

WHAT TENNESSEE PAPERS SAY.

LOYAL AND FAITHFUL.

The attempt of the Tennesseean and American to injure Maj. Stahlman has been one of the best advertisements for the Banner we have seen in some time. It has been the occasion of bringing forth many complimentary notices of Maj. Stahlman that show him to be one of Tennessee's most loyal and faithful citizens—a man who is appreciated by all true Tennesseeans for the valuable services he has rendered the State during his long and useful career. (Bedford County Times.)

SPITEFUL WAR.

Concerning the little spiteful war made on Maj. E. B. Stahlman by Luke Lea and the Tennesseean, the Memphis News-Scimitar says: "It will be a blessing to Tennessee when Luke Lea, colonel in the National Guard by the generosity and bad judgment of Tom Rye, pitches his tent in France and finds himself where he can no longer be a disturbing factor in Tennessee politics. Thus far his official duties have interfered in no way with his personal and selfish designs. Maj. E. B. Stahlman earned his eternal ingratitude the day he was instrumental in electing him to the Senate, and he has dogged him ever since with villainous persistence, not only to wreak vengeance upon him personally, but to destroy the influence of his newspaper. * * * There isn't a more patriotic honorable, or more generous man in the United States. He reared a large family and his children and their children are a credit to this country. Maj. Stahlman is now an old man, but he has as many friends as Luke Lea has enemies, and no man could wish for more." All of which the Index heartily indorses. (Bedford County Index.)

COWARDLY AND CONTEMPTIBLE.

The cowardly and contemptible effort to discredit Maj. Stahlman, of the Nashville Banner, was simply another example of editorial jealousy and malicious spite. And the storm of indignation it aroused is simply another evidence of the fact that the public will not support a newspaper that depends upon lies and appeals only to the prejudice of the poison minority. (Morristown Republic.)

THE TRUMP PLAYED.

Maj. Stahlman waited until his enemies had played their last card, then he played his trump. You have to get up before day to put one over on the major. (Sparta News.)

DEFENSE OF MAJ. STAHLMAN.

To the EDITOR OF THE BANNER:

In reading in the columns of the Banner of some of those who criticize Maj. Stahlman on his loyalty, I want to say I have been a reader of the Banner for three years and I have never doubted Maj. Stahlman's loyalty to the United States.

There is no paper that has come out in defense of America more urgent and patriotic than the Banner.

The Banner has many times appealed to masses of the people to defend their country and help win the war, and no one dares to deny this; and this is a duty which everyone should perform whether in the trenches, in the factory, or behind the plow handles. A man has three duties to perform: A duty to his God, his country, and his home. A man who will not defend these duties is a coward. I am not a war lord like the Kaiser and Hindenburg, but I believe we should carry the war to a finish or till the Kaiser asks for peace which will be everlasting.

I am not from what some would call a warring family, but I am proud of the fact that my ancestors have been soldiers in all of America's wars, from Bunker Hill to Vera Cruz and from Gettysburg to Santiago's grim walls.

Both of my grandfathers served in the Confederate army, and one of them charged with Pickett up that blood-stained slope at Gettysburg, and I still honor his memory, and I am proud of the fact that some of his grandsons are serving their country in the world war. Let us bury old grudges and politics and stand firm side by side, and back up these boys who are giving their lives in defense of peace. There will be many vacant chairs in homes; there will be streams of tears that will be shed for those who return not. Think of the mothers sending their nearest and dearest to the bloody battle fields of France. For the dearest thing on earth to a mother is her son; so let not those war mothers look us in the face and say you did not do your duty.

L. D. SANDERSON.

BUMPUS MILLS, Tenn.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I have heard the statement made by my colleague [Mr. MCKELLAR] concerning the comments of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] upon the Attorney General, and his action in dismissing Mr. Campen, assistant district attorney at Nashville, Tenn., for what he considered improper conduct in connection with the case of Maj. E. B. Stahlman, and I can add little to what he has so well said.

I have personal knowledge of what facts were submitted to the Attorney General and upon which he held that Maj. Stahlman was not an alien enemy and required to register under the proclamation of the President, but a duly naturalized American citizen, and have seen the correspondence between him and Mr. Campen, and my colleague has stated them correctly.

Maj. Stahlman came to the city of Washington on business of a public nature just previous to the time alien enemies were required to be registered. While here he told me that his status as a citizen was being agitated and misrepresented by some parties in Nashville, and submitted to me the facts in regard to his birth, emigration to West Virginia, then a part of Virginia, with his father and mother, the subsequent death of his father, the remarriage of his mother, and the subsequent naturalization of his stepfather, Mr. Harnish, while he was yet a minor, and a certified copy of the record of the naturalization of Mr. Harnish. I had no doubt, upon the facts given me, but that he was an American citizen, but suggested to him that the best way to have the matter settled and forestall all efforts to harass him was to submit the facts to the Department of Justice and have his status finally determined.

He believed he was a duly naturalized American citizen and was conscious of his loyalty to our Government and did not want to be misrepresented. I had him then make out a statement of the facts not appearing of record and transmitted them to the Department of Justice with a request for an opinion upon them. That statement was made in my office here in Washington, in the absence of papers and family records of Maj. Stahlman. The Attorney General was of the opinion, as stated in the letter read by Senator McKELLAR, that upon those facts Maj. Stahlman was a duly naturalized American citizen, and not an alien enemy.

Immediately after Maj. Stahlman went home, which was in a few days, he wrote me that there were some inaccuracies in dates and names in the statement he had prepared in my office, and which I had transmitted to the Department of Justice, and inclosed a corrected statement which, upon his request, I filed with the Department of Justice. The corrections were wholly immaterial and did not change the legal aspects of the case.

There was no question of loyalty or disloyalty discussed or involved, the sole inquiry being whether Maj. Stahlman was an alien enemy or a naturalized American citizen. When the Lusitania was sunk, I believe a flagrant and just cause of war against Germany existed, and have held to that opinion ever since. I voted for the declaration of war against Germany, and for every measure that President Wilson had advised and the Congress has enacted into law for the vigorous prosecution of the war; and have been familiar with the war spirit in Tennessee, and the attitude of our public men in regard to it from the day the declaration of war was made. Maj. Stahlman in his paper, the Nashville Banner, came out strong for America and against Germany, promptly, and, as I remember, immediately urged all the force of the Banner capable of bearing arms to volunteer, promising to pay their dependents one-half of their salaries while absent in the service of their country, and I understand that every member of his family within the military age is now in the Army.

I believe that if there had been any question of Maj. Stahlman's loyalty and patriotism, I would have known it, and such a thing did not occur to me when I submitted the facts relating to his citizenship to the Department of Justice. He has long been one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Nashville and of Tennessee, and has always taken a leading and active part in everything that tended to the upbuilding of the city and State; and, as evidenced by the almost unanimous voice of the press of the State, when he was attacked as an alien enemy by the Tennesseean and American, has the confidence and good will of the majority of his fellow citizens. When I received the letter of the Attorney General, to which I have referred, I mailed it, as I now remember, to Maj. Stahlman, and heard nothing more of the matter until my attention was called to a communication in the Tennesseean and American purporting to be from Washington, to the effect that the Department of Justice had given out an opinion that Maj. Stahlman was an alien enemy, followed by an interview of Mr. Campen, the assistant district attorney, extolling the loyalty and patriotism of Maj. Stahlman. I called up someone at the Department of Justice and asked what the communication to the Tennesseean and American meant, but no one there knew anything about it, and I was informed that no such information had been given out to anyone. Of all of which I informed Maj. Stahlman. The next thing I heard of the case was that Mr. Campen had been removed, and Mr. Littleton appointed in his place, which I learned from Nashville newspapers. If Maj. Stahlman had any connection with the removal of Mr. Campen I do not know it, and I have no reason to believe that he made any effort to remove him.

The Attorney General has informed me that the removal was made for the good of the service growing out of the conduct of Mr. Campen in connection with the Stahlman case, wherein he displayed bitterness and extreme partisanship that unfitted him for the position. I know of no facts connected with this case which warrant the charge or inference that Mr. Campen was removed for desiring to prosecute Maj. Stahlman for disloyalty, nor do I know of anything connected with the case tending to show that the Attorney General favored or desired to favor Maj. Stahlman in the investigations that were made. The facts submitted to him have not been successfully controverted, and upon them the opinion given by him was unquestionably sound. I was not present when the Senator from Illinois referred to this matter in his speech last Friday and knew nothing about it until after the Senate had adjourned, when I was informed of it by my colleague, who stated that he had obtained his information from Senator WALSH. I was engaged that evening working upon the passport bill, which was then pending before the Judiciary Committee and to-day passed by the Senate. Had I been present, I would have given the facts as I have here stated them, which I believe fully exonerate the Attorney General from any suspicion of failure to discharge his duties, and Maj. Stahlman from the charge of disloyalty. I do not believe that the distinguished Senator from Illinois would have made the unfavorable comments contained in his speech as it appears in the RECORD this morning if he had been in possession of the facts and not been misled by some designing persons who are hostile to Maj. Stahlman and desired to injure him by unfounded insinuations of disloyalty, even to the extent of misrepresenting and traducing the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I omitted to say, in addition, that Maj. Stahlman has one or two—I do not know which—grandsons in the Army now. I omitted also another matter of very considerable importance. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is present, and, inasmuch as my statements have been questioned, I should like to ask the Senator if I am correct in the statement that I have made as to what took place in this Chamber on last Friday when the speech was made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], which is published in to-day's RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, "the very head and front of my offending" in this matter "hath this extent, no more"——

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me to say that he has not offended at all, so far as I am concerned?

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank him for having taken the part of the Attorney General of the United States under the circumstances; and I say to him that, in my judgment, the Attorney General of the United States deserved his attitude in the matter on that day.

Mr. WALSH. I was sitting in the gallery with a lady friend when the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] made his reference to the matter which has given rise to this discussion. As I recall, he stated that the removed assistant district attorney had represented in some way—I think, perhaps, through the public press—that he had been removed because he was too active in the prosecution of persons charged with disloyalty. Feeling that that was in a way at least an unjust insinuation against the Attorney General, I came to the floor and simply asked the Senator from Illinois if he had seen the statement made in the public press to the effect that the assistant district attorney was removed because he had not been sufficiently vigorous in the prosecution of persons charged with disloyalty and other similar crimes.

It is needless for me to say that I was not prompted in the action that I took by the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] or by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] or anyone else. I usually act upon my own impulse and motion when I address the Senate. The junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is quite right in his statement that he was not in the Chamber at the time at all, and apparently knew nothing about the incident until I told him about it in the lobby.

I might say the same with respect to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I have no recollection of seeing that Senator in the Chamber; and I have never talked to him about the matter, even, until this day.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio if he intends to go on any further this evening with the bill he has in charge?

Mr. POMERENE. No. I was going to move, in the absence of the Senator from Alabama, that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I asked the question because I want to have a short executive session before we adjourn.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 10, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 9, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that through the wide-world contest and the terrible conditions resulting therefrom men are finding their souls and being brought nearer to Thee, through a deeper, broader, and more abiding faith; that religion is stirring the hearts of men as never before.

Sectarianism, creeds, dogmas, wild speculations about the future are diminishing through a more rational view of life and its far-reaching purposes.

Never was there a time when the sympathy of men was more widely spread, as evidenced by charity, philanthropy, patriotism, self-sacrifice, which are moving men toward the Hill of Calvary. Grant, we beseech Thee, that the hallowed work may continue till all hearts shall be purified, glorified, and an everlasting peace bless the world and hallow Thy name, in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have received information from the mountains of Kentucky, where the spirit of true liberty and patriotism always dwells [applause], and where the conscription law at the time of its enactment was not very popular, that in every city, town, and county the third liberty loan has been largely oversubscribed, and in some instances several times over. I have not yet received the complete reports from the tenth congressional district, which I have the honor to represent in this body, but the reports I have received show large oversubscriptions. Paintsville and Prestonsburg, on the Big Sandy, have both largely exceeded their quotas. The city of Hazard, of public-building fame [applause], has oversubscribed its quota more than 150 per cent. My home city of Pikeville, which probably many of you remember in the same connection [applause], and the city of Whitesburg, and Letcher County, in which it is located, have oversubscribed their respective quotas by 300 per cent. [Applause.]

I read the following telegrams which I have received:

HAZARD, KY., May 9, 1918.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
Washington, D. C.:

Perry County subscribed $165,700 third liberty loan, which is over 50 per cent in excess of allotment. More than 1,100 persons bought bonds.

J. B. HOGE.

[Applause.]

HAZARD, KY., May 9, 1918.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
Washington, D. C.:

Perry County 50 per cent over quota third liberty loan.

HAZARD HERALD.

[Applause.]

WHITESBURG, KY., May 9, 1918.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
Washington, D. C.:

Whitesburg fully exceeds treble its quota of $55,000. Letcher County exceeds treble its quota, over $80,000. Perry County exceeded its quota about $50,000.

D. I. DAY.

[Applause.]

PAINTSVILLE, KY., May 9, 1918.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
Washington, D. C.:

All eastern Kentucky counties subscribed full quota and many over. Johnson 30 per cent over.

JOHN E. BUCHINGHAM.

[Applause.]

PIKEVILLE, KY., May 9, 1918.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
Washington, D. C.:

Pikeville exceeds its quota third liberty loan fully 500 per cent, and entire county largely in excess.

FON ROGERS.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have other reports, which I shall not take the time to read, which indicate that in the mountain sections of Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, and, indeed, throughout that entire mountain region, the people are rallying to the support of the Nation's flag, as they have always done throughout the history of the Republic. [Applause.]

PENSIONS.

Mr. GALLIVAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 12000) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report (No. 543), ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California reserves all points of order.

MOTHERS' DAY.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House concurrent resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution (No. 40), which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That with the approach of Mothers' Day the attention of the Nation be directed to the patriotic sacrifice made by the mothers of our land in freely offering their sons to bear arms and, if need be, die in defense of liberty and justice; that in appreciation of this great sacrifice the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to recommend in the observance of Sunday, May 12, 1918, as Mothers' Day that the people of the United States offer fervent prayers to Almighty God for His divine blessing on the mothers of our country, especially those having sons serving under our flag throughout the world.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MANUFACTURE OF GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES AT ATLANTA, GA., PENITENTIARY.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned on Tuesday last it was dividing on the adoption of House resolution 335, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 335.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8938; that there shall be not exceeding one hour of general debate, to be equally divided between those supporting and those opposing the bill, which debate shall be confined to the said bill at the end of which time the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and at the conclusion of such reading the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, together with the amendments, if any, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on this resolution. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 42, noes 43.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 191, nays 132, answered "present" 4, not voting 103, as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the draft law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of the draft law. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3402) to fix the age limits for candidates for admission to the United States Naval Academy.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4244. An act for the relief of entrymen within the Castle Peak irrigation project, in Utah.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 4208. An act authorizing postage rates on aeroplane mail;

S. 1545. An act to amend the act of March 3, 1913, entitled "An act to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States"; and

S. 3402. An act to fix the age limits for candidates for admission to the United States Naval Academy.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8753. An act to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KETTNER, for two weeks, on account of having to return to California on important business; and

To Mr. GRIFFIN, for five days, on account of a death in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take up the conference reports on Senate joint resolutions 123 and 124 prior to the consideration of the bill H. R. 8938, and that immediately after the disposition of those two conference reports that bill be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent, the special rule just passed to the contrary notwithstanding, to take up the conference report which the Clerk will report by title.

Mr. DENT. There are two, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first one by title. You can not take up both at once.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 123) providing for the calling into military service of certain classes of persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the other by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman who proffers this request why, when the House had just adopted a rule making one war measure immediately in order, the gentleman wishes that to be put aside in order to act upon these two other measures?

Mr. DENT. Well, because it is thought that those are more important than the other two, to be perfectly frank with the gentleman. The question of registering the boys becoming 21 years of age is certainly a very important measure and ought to be passed on by the House now in view of the fact that regulations have already been adopted by the Provost Marshal General's office providing for such registration on the 5th day of June.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, still further reserving the right to object, I assume, of course, that the gentleman has just voted for this rule knowing that it provided for the immediate consideration of this measure, and he is, of course, aware that under the rule there is only one hour's general debate permitted and that the bill is very brief and certainly it can not defer action upon his conference report but for a few hours at the most, and it seems to me that it is not orderly procedure for us to have a vote upon a rule making in order a measure which is urged as a war emergency bill and then immediately after we adopt the rule to ask by unanimous consent to defer action on that on account of the presentation of two conference reports. If the conference reports were offered prior to voting upon the rule, I presume it would have then been in order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to offer this suggestion? This rule came up and this vote came at this particular time because it was the unfinished business. Had it been the question of bringing forward this rule as an original proposition this morning it would not have been presented, I feel quite sure, but the conference report would have had the right of way. The Committee on Rules would not have insisted upon presenting a rule ahead of these conference reports, but the gentleman from Massachusetts realizes the parliamentary situation in which the House is placed by reason of the action of Tuesday.

Mr. WALSH. Yes, Mr. Speaker; and I further realize that one, if not both, of these conference reports have been pending for some little time, and I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. DENT. The gentleman is mistaken about that. One of these conference reports was not submitted until Tuesday afternoon late, while something else was pending in the House.

Mr. WALSH. When was the other submitted?

Mr. DENT. That has been pending about a week.

Mr. WALSH. Now, does the gentleman think——

Mr. DENT. The first report is a disagreement and the report of Tuesday was an agreement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a controversy between the Atlanta Penitentiary and the Army of the United States, and I think we ought to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has tried to get order three or four times.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he believes it is particularly urgent at this time that the action upon the penitentiary measure, which has just been made in order, should be set aside in order to act upon these conference reports, and if he thinks that if the conference reports were delayed until after the penitentiary bill was disposed of that the military situation in the country would be seriously affected?

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts will agree with me that the conference reports are of far more importance than the Atlanta Penitentiary proposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WALSH. Well, I do not object in view of that statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the first conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 522).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the resolution (S. J. Res. 123) providing for the calling into military service of certain classes of persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

On the amendment of the House the conferees have been unable to agree.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its amendment to Senate joint resolution 123.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] moves that the House recede from its amendment to Senate joint resolution 123.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. If the House should recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, it would take precedence of the motion that the House further insist?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. So I will give notice that if this motion is voted down I will, if somebody else does not, move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. The bill is in this shape: It came from the Senate without a provision for credits to volunteers. The House put that amendment into the bill. Is the only motion that can be made a motion to recede?

The SPEAKER. A motion to recede ends it; that is, if it should prevail.

Mr. CANNON. This motion would take precedence, that the House do further insist?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. To make a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. If the motion to recede fails of adoption, will it be necessary for the House to further insist?

The SPEAKER. Not necessarily. It can do it if it wants to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Will it be in order to do so?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to recede is defeated, that would be tantamount to insistence.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. NORTON. May we have the House amendment read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the House amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

House amendment: Page 2, line 10, after the word "residing," insert a comma and the following: "and credit shall be given on its quota to any State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, for the number of men who have entered the military or naval service of the United States from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, since April 1, 1917, including members of the National Guard who were in Federal service on that date."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is what is known as the quota resolution, providing for the division of drafted men into four classes, or five, when including the exempted class. The House adopted an amendment providing that under this new classification credit should be given for volunteers in each State and in each community, as provided in the original draft law of May 18 of last year. The Senate insisted that that amendment should not be agreed to. The conferees came back to the House, as I promised when we went to conference, for instructions in the event that they could not agree, with a disagreement. I finally made up my mind to move to recede from the House amendment, not because I have changed my original opinion, but because I think the matter is too unimportant to further delay legislation upon this proposition.

Gen. Crowder, who has had charge of the draft law, insists that he could not execute the law satisfactorily with that provision in it; the Secretary of War is in accord with Gen. Crowder upon this proposition. They both appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs several days ago and insisted that the House amendment ought to be stricken from this bill. I called their attention to the fact that the President of the United States had voluntarily written me a letter, which I read to the House when this bill was before us, advocating the principle of credits for volunteers, and that I did not feel that I should move to recede unless the President himself had changed his mind. I was informed by the Secretary of War that the President——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman will let me finish my statement.

I was informed that the President of the United States had changed his mind upon this subject upon the presentation of certain specific facts that were worked out by Gen. Crowder from the questionnaires after the Military Committee had reported this bill to the House, these facts not being in the possession of the Military Committee or of Gen. Crowder at the time we reported this bill. I would like to have the letter of the President read from the Clerk's desk at this time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 7, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. DENT: I take the liberty of writing you to say that I have become convinced that I was mistaken in advising you recently with regard to the matter of credits in the draft legislation. When the matter was presented to me I had not fully analyzed, and I dare say that the gentlemen who presented the matter to me had not fully analyzed, the effects which would ensue by allowing credits for the number who had volunteered. I do not know whether they have changed their opinion in the matter, but I have been convinced by the facts as presented to me by the War Department that I took a mistaken view of the matter, and I now write to say that in my judgment that mistake ought to be corrected. I hope that if I was instrumental in any way in leading the committee of the House to the conclusion they came to you will express to them my apologies for not having looked into the facts more thoroughly before I advised.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. S. HUBERT DENT, Jr.,
House of Representatives.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom?

Mr. DENT. Not at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. DENT. I wish to make this additional statement, and then I am perfectly willing to yield to any gentleman during my time and give him a chance to discuss this proposition, because I intend to move the previous question on this motion.

I have reached the conclusion, as I stated a little while ago, to make this motion to recede, not that I had changed my opinion, but because I think the practical effect is too small to warrant the delay in the passage of this legislation. Take, for instance, the situation under the facts presented by Gen. Crowder. My State, Alabama, would have to furnish between 28,000 and 29,000 under this draft. The State of California, represented by my colleague on the committee [Mr. KAHN], would get the benefit of credits and would not have to furnish any. But in the end, on the next call, Alabama would get credit for her 29,000, and California would not have any credit, so that in the end the result will practically be the same, and it is too small a matter for us to delay this legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have no access to the hearings of the Committee on Military Affairs, for reasons sufficient to the committee. But the gentleman from Alabama has stated that the Secretary of War and the Provost Marshal General have appeared before the committee and have given their reasons for this legislation, and he has had read a letter from the President saying that he also has changed his mind upon this subject. The letter from the President, however, gives no reasons for the change of mind. Does the gentleman care to tell the House what was said by Secretary Baker and the Provost Marshal General as to their attitude, since the President has not indicated what induced him to change his mind?

Mr. DENT. One of the main reasons that the Provost Marshal General gave was that in this draft some States and some communities would not furnish any soldiers at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the State of Pennsylvania, I am told, this legislation will require an additional 25,000 men; that is to say, if no credit is given for volunteers.

Mr. DENT. The State of Pennsylvania would get credit for that on the next draft, so that in the end it will work out just as fairly as any law of this kind could.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to work along with the gentlemen of the Committee on Military Affairs. Perhaps they are right in proceeding in executive session and without undue publicity. But it does seem that the House should have some information with regard to these changes of law when they affect the various States as they seem to affect mine.

Mr. DENT. I am perfectly willing to put into the RECORD, so far as I am concerned, the figures that Gen. Crowder furnished to the committee as to how this would operate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We should surely have something upon which to exercise discretion as Members of Congress——

Mr. DENT. I am perfectly willing for them to be read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will do that, very well. But he has admitted that two distinguished officials appeared before the committee and stated that they would like this thing done, though we have no reasons, and then he read a letter from the President, stating his change of mind, but giving no reasons.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. What is the system of credits that will be adopted on the next draft that the gentleman speaks about?

Mr. DENT. The system of credits will be this: If Alabama, as I stated, furnishes 29,000 soldiers on this call, and California none, then the next time class 1 is called California would be called before Alabama.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. In a moment.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Then the system of credits is not to be abandoned, but still kept in effect?

Mr. DENT. It is not to be entirely abandoned.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from California, and then to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the resolution, with the House amendment, every State in the Union would get credit for all its volunteers as well as for the men who have been drafted from each State. That is the meaning of the language of the amendment that was put into the bill by the House. Figuring on the volunteers in the Army, the volunteers in the Navy, and the men who have been drafted, as well as the men who have been inducted voluntarily into the service since the order of December 15 last was promulgated, the quotas of the various States of the Union have been classified by the Provost Marshal General. That classification, I understand, the chairman of the committee desires to have read for the benefit of the House.

Under that classification there are four States in the Union, or rather three States and the District of Columbia, that will not have to furnish a single man in the second draft, because their quota is ahead of what they would be required to furnish under the second draft. In other words, they have furnished to the Government more men than they would be called upon to furnish.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. If they have already done more than their duty, why should they be expected at this time to go ahead of what the others have done?

Mr. KAHN. Because in the very next draft, under the language of the pending amendment, there will be a different condition of affairs, and then they will have to do more than their duty, while some of the other States——

Mr. NORTON. How does that come about?

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom?

Mr. KAHN. I am consuming the time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama yielded to the gentleman from California some time.

Mr. KAHN. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

The SPEAKER. How much time did the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. DENT. Ten minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose we would have no subsequent draft, would it be fair to these States?

Mr. KAHN. If the idea of the War Department prevails, and we are to furnish 3,000,000 men under the Army appropriations asked for, there must be subsequent drafts.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. As I understand it, the resolution provides that the quota to be furnished from each State shall be taken from class 1.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. Now, if it be true that we must possibly furnish 3,000,000 men, the number in class 1 will be exhausted.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. KREIDER. Assuming that it will be exhausted, upon what basis will the quota be obtained for the next draft, if class 1 has been exhausted?

Mr. KAHN. The presumption is that there will be other laws passed providing for additional drafts, by changes in the age limit, or by the invasion of classes 2, 3, 4, and so forth.

Mr. KREIDER. Do I understand that the gentleman is of the opinion that in view of existing law, and in view of the resolution passed, the President is not empowered to call now anyone except those in class 1.

Mr. KAHN. If this law goes through, that will be so. That is the very purpose of passing this resolution, namely, to exhaust men in class 1 everywhere before class 2 is invaded anywhere.

Mr. KREIDER. I understand. I fully realize and agree with the gentleman from California that that is the proper policy to pursue; but I am apprehensive of the fact, because of recent developments, that class 1 will not furnish us the men we need to prosecute this war successfully.

Mr. KAHN. I agree with the gentleman that if the war is to be a protracted one, I know that there are not enough men in class 1 as at present constituted, but it will yield the 3,000,000 men who will be provided for in the proposed Army appropriation bill, which is now being considered by the Military Committee.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman from California what additional information he has to present to the House as a reason for the House reversing its action, which it took by an overwhelming vote on this question, other than that the President has changed his mind.

Mr. KAHN. When the bill was up before the House, I stated that I was not in favor of the House amendment. The President has come to my way of thinking. I stated at that time that every State in the Union was getting credit for its Army volunteers in an indirect way. Gentlemen from the Southern States made much of the fact that California had a small percentage in class 1. The reason has since developed. There were so many volunteers for the Army and Navy from California that did not go into class 1. They went into the service of their country before there was any classification. If they had not volunteered, class 1 would have been largely increased and our percentage would have been that much greater, so that we got an indirect credit, which was exactly the thing that I said had occurred under the classification system.

Mr. DILL. The gentleman stated that when the next draft came the States, in furnishing men on this draft, if the credit system were used, would be called upon to furnish their men. Now, if between this draft and the next draft a sufficient number of men should volunteer from these States, they would not be called upon again, would they?

Mr. KAHN. Volunteering has run down very considerably. There is little volunteering now.

Mr. DILL. They are volunteering in the Navy and in the Marine Corps.

Mr. KAHN. They get credit for that in an indirect way, because that reduces their class 1 quota.

Mr. DILL. Not necessarily.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; positively.

Mr. DYER. If we should so act in this conference report as to agree with the motion of the chairman of the committee, will not that have the effect of retarding the volunteering of men for service, since the States, cities, and so forth, would receive no credit for it?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so.

Mr. HAYES. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. I want to ask the gentleman how the States are to get credit for these volunteers, many of whom would never be put in class 1? Many of the volunteers are above the draft age and therefore can not be credited.

Mr. KAHN. The greater percentage of those who have volunteered would be in class 1. That is the information we get from the War Department.

Mr. DYER. That is correct information.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NORTON. I am very anxious to have cleared up the statement made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. DENT] and by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], that in the end it will make no material difference whether the House amendment is adopted or not. I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to say that, taking the cases of California and Alabama, if the House amendment is adopted the State of Alabama will be required to furnish 29,000 men and the State of California in this next call will be required to furnish no men. Is that right?

Mr. KAHN. That is correct.

Mr. NORTON. Now, if the House amendment is adopted, then, if the next call is for a million men, on that hypothesis will California be required to supply a larger number of men in the third draft than it would if the State supplied its quota for the second call, without allowances for volunteers and other enlistments? I think not. If the House amendment is adopted, each State and each community will be required merely to supply an equitable proportion of men for the Army. Why, if the House amendment is adopted, would not the percentage of men to be supplied in the third call be the same for California as for Alabama?

Mr. KAHN. Because under the language of this resolution Alabama would get credit for the 29,000 men that she furnishes at this time, while California gets no credit at all; and the next time there is a call California would have to make up that deficiency.

Mr. NORTON. I do not consider that deduction a correct one. The adoption of the House amendment will put Alabama and California on an equal basis as far as their apportionment is concerned, whereas if the House amendment is not adopted they will not be on an equal basis, but California and other States where volunteer enlistments have been large will be required to supply many more men than their fair and equitable proportion.

Mr. KAHN. As I have repeatedly stated, California has received credit in an indirect way, which accounts for her low percentage in class 1.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have before me a chart issued by the Provost Marshal General's office. I think it is dated back in December. It is a chart with reference to the enlistments. I think the proportions have not changed very much since that time.

Mr. KAHN. I do not know whether they have or have not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But, at all events, the gentleman is stating that by reason of the large enlistments made from California California would have no men to furnish if this amendment prevailed.

Mr. KAHN. That is what the Provost Marshal General stated to the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to know, and I would like to have some gentleman state, and I would like to have the House hear, where the Provost Marshal General gets his figures. I can not find them from any statement in this report he has made. They are not there. This statement is not in accordance with his report. His report that I have before me here shows the State of Oregon as highest in ratio of enlistments, and next is the District of Columbia; then Washington and Maine, and some of these other States that he figures will not have to furnish anything by reason of their enlistments being away down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, of course that statement was made before the classification of men was taken up by the War Department. It was based on total population, and I think that report was made in December, probably. What is the date of it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it is December; but the proportions have not changed since then.

Mr. KAHN. The proportions have changed in some of the States; in fact, in many of the States; but the figures that we now get from the War Department are based entirely on classification. The House amendment also provides for Navy credits. According to the figures, combining Army and Navy credits, three States in the Union will not have to furnish any men under this draft—California, Nevada, and Rhode Island—and I believe the District of Columbia, Connecticut, and Massachusetts will have to furnish only a very small percentage.

Mr. OLNEY. Massachusetts would have to furnish 8 per cent.

Mr. KAHN. I think Massachusetts would have to furnish 8 per cent and Connecticut only 4 per cent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If the House recedes from this amendment under what law will any credits be given for the next draft?

Mr. KAHN. No law. There will be no credits given, and really the majority of the credits were given under the first draft law.

Mr. WALSH. That did not include the Navy volunteers.

Mr. KAHN. No; that did not include the Navy. That included all of the volunteers for the Army.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I understood the chairman of the committee to say that there would be great difficulty in administering the law with the House amendment. What is the difficulty?

Mr. KAHN. The officials of the War Department notified the committee to that effect. Probably the chairman——

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. There is nothing but that bald statement?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; they furnished data to the committee.

Mr. DENT. They would have to rearrange and reorganize.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment which we are asked to recede from passed the House by a vote of 292 to 65, an overwhelming majority. It simply seeks to preserve in the law one of the fundamental things in the law as we passed it, and that is the giving of credits to those who volunteer. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] asked the chairman of the committee if credits would be allowed in case this amendment was rejected, and I think he got the idea that credits were to be allowed. I want the House to understand that if the motion to recede prevails, no credits will any longer be allowed for volunteers. When the report of Gen. Crowder was made on the first draft you will find on page 17 of that report he has what he calls a banner roll—the banner roll of counties in the United States. He went to the trouble to print in the RECORD the name of every county that had furnished a sufficient number of volunteers for this Nation when it needs men to fight for it, so that the draft would not have to be applied to that county. He comes in now and asks you to pull down this banner roll. It is no longer to be a banner to a community or to a State to have furnished men voluntarily to fight the battles of the country. The only reason I have heard urged for the adoption of this proposition, the rejection of the amendment, is that the Provost Marshal General asks to have it done. His department does not want to be bothered with seeking out and determining where these volunteers should be credited. If you reject this amendment, it does not add a single soldier to the Army of the United States. If you adopt this amendment, it does not add a soldier. As I said, when we had the matter under consideration, it is whether or not we were going to adhere to the idea of giving credit for volunteers. At the end if we draft all these men in class 1, as the chairman has indicated, we can not escape this, that those States that have furnished generously of their men as volunteers to win this war are going to have to bear an unfair proportion of this great struggle.

There are two classes of taxes we have got to pay in this war; one is in money and the other is in men, or a blood tax. When a certain community has paid its share of the money tax we say it is sufficient, and under the law we have also determined what the man tax shall be. Take the State of Massachusetts, which my friend, Mr. WALSH, here represents. Every man which Massachusetts would be required to furnish, if my amendment prevails, will be 7,395. If that amendment is rejected she will have to furnish 27,000—20,000 more men from Massachusetts than if credit for volunteers were given. She will be required to give that much more of her manhood to the Nation.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. DEWALT. It has been stated that this credit would afterwards be given. Is there any foundation in fact for that statement?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; there will be no further credit given if my amendment is rejected.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Certainly.

Mr. DENT. But it is a fact; perhaps I did not make it clear; this proposed plan of the Provost Marshal's office is to exhaust class 1 throughout the United States before he goes into any other class, and therefore if by this call he takes more from one State than from another, he will go into class 1 of the States which furnished less than their proportion.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. When all of class 1 is exhausted, if a certain State had volunteered no men whatever and another State has volunteered fifty or seventy-five thousand men, as some States have volunteered, they will have furnished just that many more men for the Army than the other State furnished by draft.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. KAHN. As I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he asked the gentleman from Nebraska whether the States had received no credit at all.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; I did not understand it that way.

Mr. KAHN. That is the way I understood the question of the gentleman, and I do not think the gentleman wanted to leave that impression. In the first draft they did get credit for their volunteers.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The law required it. Now, in the case of the State of Pennsylvania——

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that was the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I did not so understand it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Might I have some more time?

Mr. DENT. I will yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The total quota that the State of Pennsylvania will be required to furnish under the law would be 178,615. That means every man who has volunteered and also every man required under this draft and the previous draft. If my amendment prevails she will have credit for a sufficient number so that her entire quota she is required to furnish would be 31,007. If that amendment goes out she will have to furnish 69,000, or 25,000 more men in this quota than if she had been given credit for volunteers. Now, the State of New York——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We could not hear the gentleman on this side. Will he please state those figures again?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If my amendment goes out the State of Pennsylvania would have to furnish 25,000 more men under this call than if given credit for volunteers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Just there, another question. Who will get the benefit of the 25,000 men Pennsylvania will have to make up?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The States that have fewer volunteers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some States will not furnish so many in proportion; is that the idea?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that, because it explains something that perhaps the House would like to have explained, and that is why certain Southern States, to which the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the committee, has called attention, have furnished a smaller proportion of volunteers than some of the Northern States. The reason for that is that those States have a large colored population, some 50 per cent of the population being colored. There are no means whereby these colored men could volunteer. There are only two regiments in the Regular Army in which colored men are taken, so the volunteers came largely from the white population.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Why is it that these colored men could not be drafted or could not volunteer?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Because there was no regiments for them to volunteer into.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Because their faces were black?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No. That was not the reason. That is something that the Army of the United States and the Congress is responsible for, if there is any error.

Mr. DENT. There are only two regiments of Cavalry and two regiments of Infantry in the entire Army of the United States that the black man is allowed to enlist in, and under the laws of the Southern States he could not enlist in the National Guard.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. So there was no chance for him to volunteer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Without regard to the white man or the black man, does that mean, if the gentleman's amendment is not sustained, that the State of Pennsylvania, for instance, would be obliged to furnish 25,000 more in proportion than some of the other States?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Twenty-five thousand more if my amendment goes out than if it stays in, according to the Provost Marshal General.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That certainly would seem to prejudice the State of Pennsylvania in favor of some other States.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If you reject this amendment, it will take away the inspiration for patriotism and volunteering which we have sought to build up in this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it be prejudicial as to numbers?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the final analysis, if all the men in class 1 are called, those States that have volunteered heavily will furnish more additional men than those that have not volunteered, if you turn down the volunteer amendment.

Mr. CARY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. CARY. Will you please give me the Wisconsin figures, if you have them there?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. Wisconsin's gross quota is 73,528; her total credit is 36,936—that is, for volunteers. If my amendment goes out, on this next quota Wisconsin will not have to furnish as large a quota as she will if my amendment stays in, because the proportion of volunteers in Wisconsin is not as large as that in some other States.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, if the House amendment is retained, class 2 will not be invaded in certain States before all the men in class 1 throughout the country have been exhausted?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not think so. Of course, if this war goes on and we have to raise a tremendous army, possibly what the gentleman says may be true. We may have to take all the classes.

Mr. HUSTED. If the gentleman will permit——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. DENT. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if the real ground of the opposition by the War Department to the House amendment is not based upon the fact that the War Department want to get all the men in class 1 throughout the country, irrespective of location and irrespective of volunteering, on the ground that they are the best qualified to fight this war?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The statement is made to the committee by the Provost Marshal General's office that they do not think that credit for volunteers is worth standing for. In other words, the statement was made that a community is not entitled to credit because of volunteers; that that is a thing they do not wish to encourage any more in the United States.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My own city of Council Bluffs some time ago enlisted more than her entire gross quota. Now, if the gentleman's amendment does not prevail, we will have to furnish just as many men?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If you have the men in class 1, you will have to furnish them.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield.

Mr. DYER. The Navy Department is now awaiting a campaign to have men volunteer for the Navy. In my city the city officials and all are helpless. What will be the effect upon the public mind when it goes out that the War Department is against volunteering and does not want to give a community credit for it?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would not attempt to interpret that.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield.

Mr. SLOAN. Calling the gentleman's attention to the statement made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] about the large number of enlistments there, I find on page 16 of the Provost Marshal General's report that California is the thirty-ninth State in the Union, being 33.76 out of every 100 as to ratio of enlistment credits to gross quota, the average for the United States being 40.42. The average for our State is 40.94. Now, how does the gentleman reconcile the strong statement made by the ranking member of the Military Committee that California profits by its large number of enlistments while it is thirty-ninth among the States?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] has again expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. May I have one minute more?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska be given 10 minutes in which to answer questions, independent of the arrangement.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-three minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended one-half hour.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I understood that others would be recognized after consultation with the gentleman, and that he must not necessarily move the previous question in an hour and a half.

Mr. DENT. Not necessarily. I will do my best to be fair. If in an hour and a half the discussion is so interesting that it is desired to be continued, it may be extended. I would like to have some program, however.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to have 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I hope that the gentleman will ask that his time be extended for 30 minutes, and then for an hour and a half longer he will yield to Members if they desire it.

Mr. DENT. Making the debate three hours?

Mr. CANNON. Yes

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that now. I have another conference report. I think after the expiration of an hour and a half or two hours we should be able to finish. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended one hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Is one-half of that time or all of it to be controlled by the gentleman?

Mr. DENT. That is the usual rule; but I will state to the gentleman that I will divide the time between those for and those against as fairly as I know how.

Mr. CANNON. I think that those who are for this amendment ought to have an hour. I do not care to control it, although I would like a little time.

Mr. DENT. I am perfectly willing. I will have 20 minutes, and the time will be extended an hour. That will be 1 hour and 20 minutes. I have yielded to the gentleman from Nebraska all the time he has asked for, and he is in favor of the amendment and against my motion.

Mr. CANNON. But it has been done by yielding five minutes at a time.

The SPEAKER. What request has the gentleman from Alabama to make?

Mr. DENT. I ask that my time be extended for one hour longer, and that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] shall take out the gentlemen who have spoken in favor of this amendment and may have half the time.

Mr. CANNON. That is not fair. I think we can get through with both of these conference reports to-day. I think somebody on the Committee on Military Affairs ought to have as much time as the gentleman has consumed.

Mr. DENT. That is what I am trying to do, and I propose to let the gentleman from Nebraska, who is opposed to my motion, control it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that his time be extended an hour, and that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], who is opposed to the pending motion, shall control half of that time.

Mr. DENT. I will put it this way, Mr. Speaker: I will ask that my time be extended one hour, and that I shall control the time so far as those who favor the motion to recede are concerned, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] shall control one-half of the time on the other side, and that he and I divide the time just as equally as we can.

The SPEAKER. Do you put the 23 minutes in the pot? [Laughter.]

Mr. DENT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one hour and that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], who is opposed to this pending motion, shall control one-half of that time and also one-half of the 23 minutes remaining of the original hour.

Mr. DENT. No; the whole time.

The SPEAKER. That is the whole time. Is there objection?

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, some of us do not understand that. Let the whole time be extended one hour.

Mr. DENT. The whole time shall be extended to one hour and 23 minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. How much time will that be for the whole debate?

Mr. DENT. Two hours.

Mr. FIELDS. And the gentleman from Alabama shall control one-half and the gentleman from Nebraska one-half?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. It is not 2 hours. It is 83 minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the total time is to be equally divided between the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Nebraska?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The total time that remains, not counting in the time already consumed, will give 83 minutes more of debate. The request of the gentleman from Alabama is that the 83 minutes be equally divided between himself, in favor of this pending motion, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], who is opposed to it. Is there objection?

Mr. BURNETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. Would that 83 minutes be dated from now?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to accept my amendment and make it an hour and twenty minutes, making it equally divided from now on.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama modify his request?

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman mean 1 hour and 20 minutes left now?

Mr. CANNON. I would like two hours and a half. Let it be divided equally.

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama modify his request or not?

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent for my original proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks that his time be extended 1 hour, making it 1 hour and 23 minutes remaining, with one half to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Nebraska. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman to accept an amendment to his request, that it be an hour and a half.

Mr. DENT. I will accept that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama modify his request?

Mr. DENT. I will modify it to meet the wishes of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama modifies his request and asks that the time be extended one hour and a half, and to that shall be added the 23 minutes remaining, which would make 1 hour and 53 minutes, and that half of it be controlled by himself, in favor of the motion to recede, and the other half be controlled by the gentleman from Nebraska, who is opposed to receding. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] proceeds, I want to use three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I want to explain to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] and also the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] in regard to the showing of the State of California. These tables which are in the printed report that Gen. Crowder gave us are based on population. The tables which the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and myself are referring to are based upon classifications, and the State of California also got credit for 12,000 naval volunteers.

Mr. KAHN. Fifteen thousand.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman from California says 15,000. Then, men have volunteered very heavily since the 1st of January. The credits for California have been worked out, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is correct in his statement.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman offered the original amendment giving credit for volunteers, but only those who volunteered for the Army. Does the gentleman think this amendment ought to include the men who have volunteered for the Navy—240,000 who have enlisted since the beginning of the war? Does the gentleman think that sort of an allowance should be made in a bill that is trying to raise an army?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. My own judgment was against that, but the House voted overwhelmingly for it.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman voted for the amendment to his amendment, and that is the thing that makes this proposition top-heavy—giving credit for naval enlistments.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Under what provision of law was the State of California given credit for naval enlistments?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Under this proposed amendment she would be. She is not given credit under any provision of law, but the figures I read were based on the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman give any good reason why volunteering for naval enlistment should not be credited? It was done during the Civil War.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. As my colleague has just said, this bill purports to raise an army. If they want to draft men for the Navy, why not draw up a bill to raise a force for the Navy? But why should you take away from your Army men who have gone into the Navy?

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. The chairman of the committee has stated in our hearing that credit would be given for enlistment of volunteers in the future. That is correct.

Mr. DENT. I should like to answer that. I have not made any such statement as that.

Mr. DEWALT. What is the gentleman's statement?

Mr. DENT. I have tried to make it clear that in the end the thing will be equalized, because the Provost Marshal General stated to the committee in the presence of the Secretary of War that he proposed to exhaust class 1 in the entire country before going into any other class. Therefore, if Alabama furnishes 29,000 in this next call and California furnishes but 10,000—using those figures for illustration—the next time Alabama would not have to go into class 1 until California had been brought up to the same proportion as Alabama. That is the effect of it.

Mr. DEWALT. Directing my inquiry now to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER]——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. I ask for one minute more for the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman has his own time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will take one more minute.

Mr. DEWALT. Conceding for the sake of argument that credit is to be given in the future, as explained by the chairman of the committee, why is it more difficult to give credit at this time than it would be to give the same credit in the future?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not think the explanation that it is difficult to do it is a sufficient explanation. They had no trouble in working that out the other time, and they will have no trouble in working it out now. I think the explanation is that they are not in favor of it in the War Department.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. WISE. I think the House should understand that, as the gentleman knows, in this call just made, where they are calling men now, they have given credit, and have not called a single man from California.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They have called the men for this draft under the present law. They say they expect to correct it if we adopt this new law, but the present call is under the old law.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. PHELAN. Is not this the fact with reference to representation, that it will amount to the same thing in the end, namely, that if they take all of class 1 from every place, when that time comes all will be on an equality; but in the meantime there will be some communities furnishing a great many more men to the Army than other communities will furnish?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Of like population.

Mr. PHELAN. And in that respect the thing will not be equitable.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. LONERGAN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. DENT. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not know that I shall use 10 minutes of the time of this body on this question, because I do not care to make a speech. It is perfectly clear in my own mind, but from the discussion I have heard this morning I realize that it will be absolutely impossible for me in my weak way to make this matter plain to the Members of the House who are now present. But I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to one or two very patent facts in connection with this legislation. In the first place I can not get away from the fact that we are a Nation, that our Nation is at war; that while I am a citizen of Illinois, I am a citizen of the United States; and I have tried to consider all war legislation absolutely free from any sectional or partisan idea. I approach the discussion of this matter in the same way. When we got into this war we found that it was necessary to raise an army. We proposed to raise part of that army by volunteering, and to follow that by a draft.

We felt then, not having any better way of doing it, that it was fair to fix the quota of the draft on the population of the respective States. I stood for that, as we all did at that time, and in fixing the quota on population we felt, and rightly so, that every State and every community ought to have credit when basing the quota on population for the number of men who had already volunteered. So we provided in that law that the States and the registration districts should have credit for their volunteers. All well and good. They got it. We all got it. The war went on. Experience demonstrated that quotas based on population is not a fair way to base quotas in this country. The Provost Marshal General proceeded then to get up a classification. You all know what it is. I want to ask right now if there is a man in this House who does not believe that the men that that regulation puts into class 1 ought to be placed in class 1.

Very well. All over this country the boys came forth and filled out their questionnaires. They have been placed in classes 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. What does the law propose to do that we have passed, with the exception of this amendment? This House voted by an overwhelming vote, the Senate voted by an overwhelming vote, that from this time forward the armies shall be based on quotas fixed on class 1 in all of the States. Very well. You have a certain number of men in class 1 in each of your States. At the beginning of the war you had just so many young men in your States who would have fallen into class 1. Thousands of them have volunteered. They are gone. The questionnaire comes along to classify those who remain in class 1. If you have had many volunteers, then you have not so many men in class 1, but is there a man here who will say that the quotas for our armies should be based on class 2 or class 3 rather than on class 1?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. In a moment. These men in class 1, regardless of where they live, are American citizens. They are the best fitted to fight our battles for us across the sea. What does the law propose? It proposes in fixing the quota to say to each State, "You shall furnish as many men in this draft as you have men in class 1 in proportion to all of the men in class 1 in this country." Is not that fair?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. If that is fair and just and equitable to every State and community in this country, why talk about credits now? Why talk about credits when you have so many men in class 1, the best men to fill the Army, regardless of where they may live? Ah, but some of my good friends here will take this floor and argue that credits should be given where? In Illinois, let us say, in some of the agricultural counties in Illinois, perhaps, where but few volunteers went forth. In the counties where there are good-sized cities many have gone forth, and under this contention for credits it means this, that you will go into the agricultural counties of this country and say to these boys who are plowing the corn or harvesting the wheat at this time, "You come and go into the Army, because we had enough of volunteers up here in Danville, for instance, or Richmond, or some other place, to make up the quota, and we can not take any men from there now"; and you go out and grab the farmer boy while perhaps the loafer stays on the street in your cities, who under this class 1 proposition, without credit, will be called into the Army. Ah, but you are for that, are you? You believe that is just, and you believe that will be dealing fairly with the people of this country? I tell you, my friends——

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. There is no question about the equity, the fairness, the justness of this thing.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. We have got to furnish the men to fight the war, have we not?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then what is the use of quibbling about credits? We have to furnish all the men that are needed.

Mr. McKENZIE. Absolutely.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to ask the gentleman to explain how we are going to get away with the proposition that any of these volunteers, a majority of them, are not in class 1 and will never be in class 1.

Mr. McKENZIE. They are in class 5.

Mr. HAYES. They were under 21 years of age and over 31, and many of them were aliens and not subject to the draft.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman that every one between 21 and 31 is now in class 5, and you get credit for him. And what does your argument mean? It means for the 21-year-old slacker or the men between 21 and 31 to stand around on the street corners saying to 18-year-old boys, for God's sake, to go and volunteer so that a particular district can get credit, and that they can stay at home, and that man is in class 1. That is what it means; yet men say it would discourage patriotism in this country and volunteering, when we have the importunities of men with yellow in them, who want some one to volunteer and go to the front while they sat at home.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, if that is so, why does the gentleman give credit in the original bill?

Mr. McKENZIE. Because the quota was based on population, and, basing it on population, it was only the fair thing to do.

Mr. PHELAN. But even basing it on population, it still gave opportunity for these people whom the gentleman asserts went around asking the boys to volunteer so that they could stay at home.

Mr. McKENZIE. Based on population it is equitable, then, and you should give credit; but basing it on class 1 it is a different proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. Which fellow does the gentleman think will make the best fighter, the slacker standing around on the corner or the fellow who went and volunteered?

Mr. McKENZIE. I have not any fear of the slacker not making a good fighter when he has got a lot of red blood surrounding him. He will fight then. I have no fear of that; but I do protest against voting for a proposition that will encourage him to sit on a dry-goods box while the farmer's boy may have to go and fight in his place.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it not a fact that basing it upon the hypothesis that the Provost Marshal is going to exhaust all in class 1, which I presume he will do——

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; he has got to do that under the law.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And any subsequent draft coming—take the illustration of California and Alabama, that if California does not furnish any in class 1 and Alabama furnishes 49,000, that the next draft at least will work out an equilibrium between the two States, based on class 1.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; if you take all of class 1, and I want to say in reply to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. May I have two minutes?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to my friend from Kentucky that I appreciate the force of his question, and I realize that with the credit system that it will mean that all these young fellows in class 1 in California, perhaps many of whom are not employed, will escape the draft this summer, while the boys who are cultivating the cotton and the corn in Alabama will be called.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is basing his argument probably on the proposition that where there is a large amount of volunteering it has reduced the number of men in class 1. The State I represent is the third in percentage of volunteering and the highest in the Union in class 1——

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. So the facts do not bear out the gentleman's contention. Furthermore, the gentleman is assuming what is not true—that the men in class 1 are put in there with mathematical accuracy. As a matter of fact, they are put in there depending upon the frame of mind of the local and State boards. There are no more men in my State who ought to be in class 1 than in the surrounding States, but we have 40 per cent in class 1 and the surrounding States have from 22 to 24 per cent in class 1.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to my good friend from Wyoming that I realize——

Mr. MONDELL. Your proposition exactly doubles our quota, compared with the surrounding States, and I ask the gentleman if that is a fair proposition.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not care what it is in your State. The law is fair, and if you have got a lot of fellows out there in Wyoming that are so disreputable and so contemptible that they will take men with wives and little children and put them in class 1, for God's sake condemn them, not the law. The law never anticipated that such a thing would be done. One further thing I want to say to my good friend from Wyoming, that when I was a young man I went out there among those mountains which make his home and where he lives, and I want to tell him that I worked all one summer long in a mine with 1,100 men and not a single woman was there. I want to tell the gentleman there are more young men, in the absence of war, who must go and get rid of their enthusiasm; that is, in the days gone by, and I assume it is true now, who go to the mountains of the West to see the great elephant in the western country, and I myself say it without fear of contradiction in the State of Wyoming compared with the population of the State of Illinois or any other State, that he has got more single men between the ages of 21 and 31——

Mr. MONDELL. It has not got more single men, but it has got fewer men who took advantage of the opportunity to get into the slacker class.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to congratulate the gentleman on that fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN].

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure I did not intend to interrupt the gentleman who has just spoken with any discourtesy——

Mr. FIELDS. I was very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PHELAN. I realize that. So many statements have been made here which I think beg the question that I could not at the moment refrain from challenging the statement the gentleman made. Let us boil the thing right down to what it is. Here is the whole question, outside of the question of clerical work, which may cause some trouble. Are you going to give communities credit for all the men they send to the service, whether by draft or by volunteering, whether in the Army or in the Navy, or are you going to give those communities credit simply for the men they are obliged to send through the draft? That is the whole question. I contend that the community ought to be given credit for every single man it contributes, whether it contributes that man voluntarily or by draft.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I have not the time; I regret that I can not yield. I say that that is the spirit of the draft law. What is the draft law? We passed it for two reasons: First, because it was the most equitable way of raising an army, and, second, because it was the most effective. If it is equitable, wherein does its equity lie? It lies in this, that it compels the various communities in the United States to contribute in equal proportions; it lays the burden with fairness on every part of the country without any discrimination of any kind. If that is the spirit of it, that every part of the country shall be treated fairly on the proposition, why is it not in accordance with that spirit to give to communities credit for the volunteers which they offer? I can see no other way out of the question at all. If you are going to give them credit for the men they contribute, you ought to give them credit for all the men they contribute, no matter what the branch of the service, whether the Army or the Navy. Consider what the War Department itself has been doing. The War Department has been taking men by enlistment up to a recent date. It would let men come in from the various communities and enlist in the Army by voluntary enlistment. They wanted those men or they would not have taken them. After they have taken them, should not the communities from which they come get credit for those men whom the Army authorities themselves invited to come in?

In that same connection I say that this question has been begged, and this point has been overlooked. It is not a question of whether those men who have volunteered and who have shown their patriotic loyalty are letting slackers stay at home. That is a detail; it is outside of the question. It is not a question of the individuals; it is not a question of whether this individual or that shall serve. It is a question of apportioning the burdens of this war, so far as that may be done, equitably all over the United States. Suppose this amendment does not prevail; suppose no credit is given for voluntary enlistments. In that case one part of the Union, one State in the Union, one county in that State may contribute very much more than the others, and it may lose its man power to a very large degree, more than the others, and its industries may be interfered with more than the others. Is that what anyone wants to see—not simply from a local standpoint but from a national point. We want to distribute the burdens of this war as fairly as we can. When gentlemen raise questions about agriculture, that point is in their minds. Why does it not apply to every part of the country, as well as to the agricultural districts? In that connection, again, the President has full power to act upon the agricultural situation, if, through the draft or in any other way, we are likely to get more farmers than we ought to get. If we are likely to get farmers who are needed at home, the President has full authority to act.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Right in that connection I would say that the Provost Marshal General has already issued orders to different boards to put the agricultural laborers at the foot of class 1, where a man is actually engaged in agriculture.

Mr. BURNETT. That is a new classification.

Mr. PHELAN. That is in spirit with the carrying on of the war. There is no Member here, no matter on which side of this question he is, who does not want just as much as any other Member to see the war won. There is no man in this body who is local in point of view, but if you are going to win this war there is one thing you have to do all of the way through, and that is, so far as you can, apportion the burdens equitably. That principle is involved in the thing we are fighting for. We are fighting for democracy, for the principle of equity. Every time we get a chance we ought to carry that principle through. That is why I am for this bill——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I not only voted for the selective-conscription bill, but I endeavored to support it by argument. The argument which I presented in support of that measure was that the bill was a fair and just one, that it would equitably apportion among the different States and the different communities the number of men which they ought to furnish. So far as I recollect, that was one of the chief arguments that was offered in support of the bill at the time. That argument now seems to have been entirely forgotten. It is contended that no credit should be given any State or community in apportioning the draft for the volunteers which it has furnished. Gentlemen tell us that this is a Nation, and it does not make any difference how many men one community may furnish or how many another community may furnish. If so, why did we ever spend so much time providing for a system of draft and apportioning the men in different parts of the country? Why do we not now take the men at random wherever we can find them, without any effort to apportion them? This contention is absurd. If you once concede that the men should be apportioned in the different parts of the community you concede the Shallenberger amendment to give credit for volunteering ought to be adopted and that we ought not to recede on this conference report. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] undertook to show by figures that it would not make any difference whether this amendment were adopted or not, that credit would be given. Why, Mr. Speaker, the city where I live has already——

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can hardly yield when my time is so short. If I have misunderstood the gentleman I will take out of my remarks all reference to him.

Mr. FIELDS. I say indirect credit will be given whether this passes or not, and additional credit will be given——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will show the gentleman it will not be done and can not be done. My own city has already enlisted more than its quota. Does the gentleman mean to tell me it will not be required to furnish more if we recede on this conference report? Everybody knows it will be required to furnish more—practically as many as if none had volunteered.

Mr. GORDON. If you have got them in class 1 or any other class.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have plenty in class 1—too many, in fact, as compared to the other States. Gentlemen say it is a fair proposition to apportion the draft in accordance with the number in class 1. I say it is not; but that matter, I suppose, has gone by. However, I would like to say a word or two in reference to that. In many of the States practically every married man was exempted by being taken out of class 1. Hundreds, I suppose thousands, of married men were put in class 1 in my State. Many of them have already been taken in the draft, leaving their wives and children at home without adequate support. Many pitiable cases have been called to my attention, where the drafted man was compelled to leave a sick wife in a delicate condition in a situation where she could not be properly cared for. The difficulty in my State has been that various communities have been so overflowing with patriotism that they have sent men who ought not to have gone at all.

By some singular course of reasoning gentlemen have argued that those communities which have furnished the largest number of volunteers have the greatest number of slackers among them. Mr. Speaker, I am getting very tired of hearing such remarks, and I resent them. We heard before the war began some intimations that the Middle West was not as patriotic as the East. I said then that if the war came the West would be the first to furnish the men and the first to furnish the money, and this has been especially true of my own State, which has gone far beyond its quota in volunteering and many times over its quota in subscriptions to liberty bonds. Gentlemen who want to protect slackers in their own States now assert that it makes no difference where you obtain the men; that this country is one entire Nation and that Members who ask that there should be some sort of equality in the draft are pleading sectional issues. This charge is absolutely without foundation, and it would not be set up if Members could think of anything else. If the question of whether credit should be given for the volunteers should be decided in this House upon its merits, there would not be a dozen votes against it; but the House seems to be afraid to act upon its own judgment or even declare its honest opinion. What fairness or justice can there be in a system under which the draft is based upon the number in class 1 when some States only put half the proportion in class 1 which is fixed by others like my own State? What excuse or reason can be given for requiring a community that has already furnished more than its quota by volunteering to furnish as many more as a community which has so little patriotic spirit in it that the volunteering has been almost negligible?

Members say we must win the war. Of course we must, and we will; but the refusal to apportion the draft fairly will not add one man to the Army or assemble it one minute quicker and everyone knows it. It will not help win the war to be unjust and unfair and to impress unnecessary hardship upon certain communities and to deliberately favor others. Members say, "Is the fact that one man volunteered any reason why another should not go?" None, so far as the individual is concerned, but so far as the community is concerned there is every reason. Only a certain number can be taken from each community without entirely ruining it and paralyzing all its business and industries. We are not likely to reach that point, of course, although we may before the war is over; but just to the degree that the active working young men are taken from the community, just to that extent will its institutions be affected. Besides the volunteers, as a rule, are those who can go with the least injury to themselves, their business, and the enterprise of the community generally, whereas the draft inevitably takes many whose business is destroyed, and in the aggregate thereby the whole community is affected.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time in the history of any country that a community was penalized for being patriotic. If there was the slightest necessity for it, if it in any way affected the strength or efficiency of our Army, the case would be different; but the only reason that has been given for rejecting the plan of giving credits for enlistments is that it would make some trouble and some work for the Provost Marshal General's office If this were true, it would be no reason at all; but why it should be true is more than I can imagine. That office ought to have the enlistments up to date, and it is as easy to determine the proportion one way or another. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the report of the conference ought to be rejected. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I shall oppose the motion to recede. I do this because as I look at it if we are to win this war we must convince the American people that we have been playing fair with the whole country. To recede now will convince the American people that we are willing to break the promise that we gave them, for when you do not give credit for the National Guard that has enlisted you break your promise to the American people, and I insist that you can not afford to do that under any circumstances. I want to call attention to this, that the War Department in insisting on this resolution has insisted upon the breaking of this promise and it is done without a proper consideration of the effect. There has been no consideration given to this resolution, in fact no comprehensive investigation. The resolution was introduced in the Senate, it was not considered by the committee so far as I know, it was not considered or debated in the Senate so far as I know, and it came over into our committee and we discovered this, that there were no facts or figures upon which to base a change of this law. It is just recently that we are beginning to find out what will come if this law goes into effect as the War Department asks us to pass it. I want to say to you that when the American people find out, as they will find out, that they are not to have credit for the National Guard units which are already enlisted, and we are not to insist upon every State furnishing its proper quota, that suspicion will at once grow up all over the country that in some States they are not furnishing their fair share of man power. The question has come up and been talked about of how many men there are in Washington who have gone into the Staff Corps. For myself I do not believe that there is any great amount and yet the people of this country believe that there are a large number of men who are slacking here in the city of Washington. Now, how much greater it will be when the people in the State of Montana or the State of Wyoming know nothing of what Connecticut is doing, and that is just what you do by receding, and the trouble comes right here that you are basing your draft quota upon class 1 and that is unscientific because it has no fixed basis. If you had adopted, as you should have done, the entire amendment——

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; excuse me for a moment. If you had adopted the first part of the Shallenberger amendment, then you would have had a scientific basis for making the draft. To make class 1 the basis of a draft is as preposterous a proposition as it is to give your son or daughter a thousand dollars and then to ask them to place it in your bank account to your credit so you may have it all back when you need it.

But the War Department will never learn. They are stubborn, and they had not thought of that before, and therefore it is some one else's idea, and they can not change their mind. And this resolution, half right and half wrong, must be driven through this House irrespective of the fact that it is unworkable and will not stand the test of time.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. I just simply wish to ask my colleague if it is not a fact that the matter of quota being based on class 1 is out of the controversy entirely, that having been settled by both the Senate and the House?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I presume for the present it is; but it will never be out of the minds of the American people. There ought to be a scientific basis for a draft.

Mr. GORDON. Gen. Crowder can change any classification to-morrow, if he wants to do so, by regulation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He certainly can when this resolution becomes a law. Those of us who are for the Shallenberger amendment are the real large Army men. We are insisting on getting 4,000,000 men from your present registration instead of 2,000,000, which is all you have when this resolution is adopted. We do not claim that any district or State has furnished too many men. What we claim is that there are from one to two million men that ought to be put in class 1 that when you pass this resolution will be for all practical purposes exempted from military service by being put in a deferred classification, and we insist that this is unfair, unjust, and unscientific, and the test of time will so demonstrate it to be.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, State quotas under the draft were originally based on estimated total populations. It developed that that basis was slightly inequitable, owing to the fact that there was not an equal number or proportion of men in all the States who were eligible for service. It was therefore suggested that State quotas should be based on the total male population eligible to service. That is a fair, proper, and equitable basis on which to fix quotas. But what is now proposed? To depart absolutely from that plan, from the pledge given to the American people under that plan. In the early days of the war we applauded the men and the communities that sent their young men and their middle-aged men as volunteers to the colors. In those days it was an honor to a community to have a large percentage of volunteers, and no one imagined that a community that sent a large portion of its population as volunteers would in addition be called upon to contribute as large a proportion of its population under the draft as the worst slacker community under the flag. And yet that is what is now proposed.

There are counties in the State I have the honor to represent from which a large portion of the available men, young and middle-aged, volunteered; two counties that under the law as it stands would not be called upon to furnish a man under the next call; counties that can not send more men without seriously interfering with the growing of grain and live stock, the production of foodstuffs. It is proposed under this change of law to take those men, essential to the production of foodstuffs, and send them, rather than send men from other communities where volunteers were few and men willing to be listed in class 1 still fewer.

I notice a gentleman smiling. The only man that can smile at a statement of that kind is a man who approves slacking and who does not believe in volunteering.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I regret I can not. I have only five minutes.

There is another feature of this proposition to which I wish to refer. It is proposed under this bill to make the basis of the quotas the men in class 1. The practical effect of that is to compel the Commonwealth that I represent to double its quota. Is there any justice in that? Forty per cent of all of our classified men are in class 1. Why? Not because there is an unusually large number of unmarried men, not because there is an unusually large number of men that necessarily fall into that class, but because there was an unusual number of men who claimed no exemption and were willing to go when they were needed. But it is not fair because they did waive exemption that they should go and the slackers in other States stay at home.

Let me make this suggestion to you gentlemen who are fighting for this proposition. We have had our questionnaires. We have divided our men into classes, but never again shall we follow that plan if you pass this bill. You ask why? Because if it is known that quotas are to be based on the number of men in class 1 communities and States will vie with each other to see which can outslack the other in order to have as few men in class 1 as possible, and thus make their quotas as small as possible.

The moment you place the burden on the man who either voluntarily allows himself to go into class 1 or the man who is placed in class 1 by action of a local board, the moment you say that he must go, while he who outrages heaven with his oaths and claims for exemption may remain at home, without regard to the quota of a State or community, based on its population eligible to service, you have broken down the whole system which has been so carefully and laboriously built up.

Do not misunderstand me. The people of my State and of all States similarly situated ask no special exemptions. They are cheerfully furnishing their quota under an estimate of population entirely too high. They stand ready to furnish their share of any number of men needed even on that padded estimate of population. But I must protest, as their representative, on a change of the rules after the game is called under which because they have a larger percentage of men in class 1 than any other State they must furnish more men in proportion to their number than any other State. It is neither just nor equitable, and if adopted will prove as unpopular as it is unfair. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN].

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, a great deal of the discussion seems to be based, if we are to judge from the general trend of the arguments, on the presupposition that we would not have any Army at all if we did not drag men in. It seems to me that gentlemen are trying to protect their communities or protect their States rather than have their remarks inspired with the idea that we are here to devise ways and means for raising an Army.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNN. Not just now, but in a moment I will.

I am sure that if I were a soldier and listened to the debates that have gone on whenever a military affairs' proposition was brought in, I would draw the conclusion, from many of the remarks uttered in the House, that this war is evidently not a war of the Nation, but that we must look out for Massachusetts, or look out for New York, or look out for Ohio. My interest must not center on New York, or Massachusetts, or Ohio, or any other State when it comes to a question of the Army The great thing I am interested in is the country, all of the States together—one mighty mass movement to save the Nation.

Let me offer a suggestion which might clarify this question for some who think they favor granting credits. I am opposed to it; but if we are to go on a basis of credit, then let credit be given to whom credit is due, and in order that that might be brought about let us amend our law so that every man who volunteers will have the privilege of deciding whether he is going to give the credit of his advance service or volunteer service to the community or to the country. Let him check affirmatively one of the following questions:

(1) "Are you volunteering out of devotion for and for the benefit of your country?" (2) "Are you volunteering out of devotion to and for the benefit of your community, your county, and your State?" Under such conditions I am confident that those who answer that they were volunteering out of devotion for their country would desire the whole country to have the benefit. If there were any who would answer, "We are volunteering so that Massachusetts, or New York, or Ohio, or Alabama, or any other State may send a less number when the country calls under the selective draft," then let their community have the credit. But I am sure if you followed this plan you would find that the men who have volunteered have not volunteered in order to help their State. They have volunteered to help their Nation, to help their country; and that is the whole object of their volunteering. For if they were inspired by any less motive than that, they do not deserve, neither would you give them, the praise that is given them and that should be given them, but no more praise than to those who await the call under the selective draft. I would not give one whit more praise or credit for patriotism to a man who advances his call by volunteering than I would to a man who awaited his call and took his place in the line.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNN. Yes.

Mr. VENABLE. As a matter of fact—and I do not wish to disparage these gentlemen who have volunteered, as it is called—is there such a thing as a volunteer?

Mr. LUNN. There would not be if I had my way.

Mr. VENABLE. Is there now, when men have to go at all events, and are given the privilege of choosing their service if they go in a little sooner than they otherwise would be required to go, which is the situation in this country? Understand I do not mean to reflect upon these men or impugn their motives. They were glad to go.

Mr. LUNN. Many of them took advanced service in order to get preferential place.

Mr. VENABLE. That is not my question. Have we any volunteers? You can not say that a man is a volunteer who has to go at all events, because he goes a little sooner.

Mr. LUNN. A man above 30 would have to volunteer.

Mr. VENABLE. I understand your argument is based upon the fact that we have certain volunteers.

Mr. LUNN. Not mine.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit me to make a suggestion, we would still take those under 18 and above 31, who are not included in the selective-service act?

Mr. LUNN. Yes. Now, the whole purpose of this attempt to raise an army out of class 1 is that in the opinion of the War Department they are the most capable and best fitted at the present time to serve in that army, and that we should utilize all in class 1 before class 2 is invaded. Class 1 should be exhausted everywhere before class 2 is invaded anywhere.

I recognize and consider it unfortunate that so many married men were taken in the first draft who would have had the right of deferred classification in the second.

If you carefully consider the classification, you know as well as I that the men who are now in class 1 are as a rule unmarried. There are some married men, and the gentleman before me [Mr. MONDELL] and others have suggested that there were men in class 1 who were married and had families and would not claim exemption.

Now, a man who will go back on one of the first obligations he has, to his family and to his children, when it is not necessary to sacrifice them, since the Government has made provision whereby they would have a deferred classification, should not be praised as unusually patriotic. I would say that he was more of a slacker than the man who considered that the Government knew what it was doing when it passed the law and provided a deferred classification for that man.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] said it was a case of providing man power and money. He knows that when it comes to money we must go where the money is. New York pays larger income taxes than any other State, I believe, and it should, because it has the wealth. And if New York State had a larger proportion of men who, in the opinion of the War Department, are best capable of serving now, then it ought to furnish those men and furnish them now.

In this crucial period is it not time that we forget State lines entirely? This is a war of the entire Nation, and the more we think in terms of the whole people the nearer we will approach the ideal in legislation.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] desired to ask me a question, and I promised to yield. I yield now.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman just referred to the taxation of New York and to the fact that it paid more taxes. It does not pay more on the dollar than any other community in the United States. Then why not impose a levy on your man power in the same way? This amendment will do it.

Mr. LUNN. If necessity demanded for the national defense 6-foot men and only 6-foot men, and New York had only 6-foot men, then New York should provide them.

Mr. GORDON. But nobody makes such a contention as that.

Mr. LUNN. I know; but it is a good illustration.

In referring to the large amount of income taxes paid by New York State I intended to show that we did not pro rate according to the individual States. New York State pays a tremendous share of the total, because New York has the wealth, and having the wealth should in all justice make the contribution. It would be grossly unfair and against the national interest to attempt to apportion income taxes on the basis of geographical lines. Now, the War Department seeks to apply the same principle regarding man power. Congress has decided to base the quota on the number of men in class 1, and to exhaust class 1 everywhere before we invade class 2 anywhere. In other words, we take the men in class 1, who are best fitted to serve at the present time, in the judgment of the War Department. If the number of men in class 1 in a given State is exhausted and there is a large number still remaining in class 1 in New York State, it is essentially more fair to take an excess number of men from New York State than to defer their call, while married men with dependents are called elsewhere.

My friends, the whole question is one of raising an Army, and raising it as quickly and as efficiently as possible. Instead of seeking to keep men out of the Army, every Member of this House should be determined to get more men into the Army. The President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, the Secretary of War and the War Department as a whole are agreed that with the automatic credit given by the selective-draft law there should be no further credit to any community or State. The Military Affairs Committee is convinced that this is the right method to pursue. If we are called upon to give more men in the Army, let us give them willingly, not according to geographical lines, but to give the men most capable and best fitted for service wherever they may be located. The splendid national spirit that has manifested itself in so many ways is the spirit that should control us in our decision. The Nation calls. The Nation should respond, and the Nation will respond gladly, and with a determination that will mean victory for the principles and ideals for which we battle. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, there is not a single argument that has been proposed here that amounts to shucks in support of this motion to recede and concur; not one.

Now, of course, we know that figures do not lie, but liars will figure if you give them a chance sometimes. [Laughter.] We have had figures here on both sides of this question. It is not necessary to have figures. This is a proposition that is so clear that it does not require any illustration by way of figures. Take the argument that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN] just made here when he talked about taxation. New York pays more taxes because it has more property subject to taxation. In framing your tax law you recognize the rule of equality, just as you did in framing this draft law. The great trouble about the repeal of this provision of the law giving credit for men already in the service is that you will absolutely break down the administration of your draft law if you pass it. That is something that, of course, the military authorities have never considered. You are withdrawing the local support that this law has received in all of these communities. What did these governors of States and all the prominent men in the different localities mean last year when they went out and made patriotic speeches appealing on behalf of their communities and their States to men to volunteer? Is there a community in the United States where they did not do it? I do not know of any. Now you propose to repudiate all that and refuse to give credit for those men who went in response to these very appeals.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I should like to ask the gentleman if he knows any good reason why my son should not be drafted because the gentleman's son has volunteered?

Mr. GORDON. None whatever. I think they ought both to volunteer. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And they both have.

Mr. GORDON. That, however, has nothing to do with this case. The effect of this motion to recede and concur will be to penalize every patriotic community in the United States. I should like to have somebody dispute that.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman illustrate how?

Mr. GORDON. Simply because when these men went out in these communities and appealed to the boys to volunteer they did volunteer, and they ought to receive credit for that.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it was necessary to appeal to them? Most of the men who volunteered did it because they wanted to go.

Mr. GORDON. That is all right. I am in favor of letting them go. You understand my position on that.

Mr. MADDEN. Most of the men who volunteered were less than 21 or more than 31.

Mr. DYER. That is not so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I suggest to the gentleman that you can not penalize an excess of patriotism. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Well, I do not agree with the gentleman about that. I am speaking of local patriotism, and I say where they have gone out and appealed to the men of communities, and the men have responded to that appeal, they should be given credit for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have got one town of 6,000 people in my district from which 600 men volunteered, and they will put in 600 men more if they have to. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. That is all right.

Mr. MADDEN. Is this a local war or is it a national war?

Mr. GORDON. Why, it is a national war, of course.

Mr. MADDEN. Then let us talk about it as a national proposition.

Mr. GORDON. The only excuse that is given for this legislation is that by some mysterious means the War Department has discovered something about these boys of 21, upon whom this proposed legislation will impose this burden, that makes them better soldiers than anyone else. Before our committee the Chief of Staff, in direct response to a question from the Secretary of War, the other day told us what he thought about that. He was asked by the Secretary of War the question which were the better soldiers, boys of 21 or men of 26, and the Chief of Staff said, of course, that men of 26 are the better soldiers. So that disposes of all these mysterious hunches that we have received from down there as to the superiority of boys for military service. The truth is that they are trying to do away with some of the opposition that has been aroused by people who do not want to be drafted. They are converting this thing into the volunteer system, except that they still retain whatever odium rests upon conscription. If it were not for one thing, I would not refer to this question at all, because my views are very well known in the House; but it seems to me, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said, that you are destroying the administration of this law by withdrawing the local support for it. Communities will begin to compete with one another as to who can be put into these deferred classes. And, of course, there is nothing sacred about this classification. Congress never enacted it. Gen. Crowder made it, and he can change it to-morrow if he wants to. There is no dispute about that, I take it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman want any more time?

Mr. GORDON. I do not care for any more time.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose the House would like to stop to have the Clerk read these figures, but I have three tables here furnished by Gen. Crowder, which I have promised to put into the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent to insert them now, unless some gentleman would like to have them read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has the gentleman got the percentage table showing the percentages to be levied upon the various States under the credit system?

Mr. DENT. I have a table here showing the percentages.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is the table dated?

Mr. DENT. No; the table is not dated, but these figures were furnished to the committee last week.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The figures are as of the 1st of May, up to date.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD certain tables. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The tables are as follows:

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to see this House reject the motion to recede, and I hope that it will insist upon the Shallenberger amendment to this resolution. I want to see that done in order that the resolution may go back to conference, so that out of it may come a just and fair method of apportioning the quotas among the several States. I voted for both parts of the Shallenberger amendment when it was before the House, because it represented the best proposition that was submitted with reference to the apportionment of quotas. The first part of his amendment, which deals with the apportionment of quotas, was defeated by a vote of 118 to 243. The second part, which provided that credit be given to the States for the men that they have furnished for this war was adopted in the House by a vote of 292 to 65, but we are now asked to also reject it. A majority of the House will now probably vote to do so, but not with my consent. I have tried to think this question out fairly and logically, and I want you gentlemen to reason with me for a little while, and see if the position that I have taken as to how quotas should be apportioned and how credits should be given is sound.

If we had known as much at the beginning of this war as we know now, Congress would have had upon the statute books a law providing for the apportionment of quotas and credits among the States. If we had solved this problem in advance it seems to me Congress would have said, "We have a supply of man power in this country that we are going to use in this war, which consists of the total number of men liable to military service, and we will provide for the apportionment of quotas according to that basis." We did not have that kind of a law, but adopted the old population scheme that was used in the Civil War draft act, which everybody now admits is illogical, unfair, and unjust.

Mr. GORDON. And they did not even carry that out.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true, because estimates of population were used and not the census of 1910. Now, after the war has been going on for a year, it is proposed to change the basis of apportionment, to change the rules in the middle of the game. It seems to me that the only fair way to distribute the burden of furnishing fighting men is to first ascertain the entire number of persons liable to military service. That number, on the day of the declaration of war against Germany, was the reservoir of man power that we have authorized the President to draw from as soldiers are needed. Like a reservoir of water that is replenished by the rains, so is it also necessary to add from time to time the numbers of young men who come of age. Having registered and classified these men, Congress should then require each State to furnish soldiers, when the President says they can be used, in proportion to the number residing within the State who are liable to military service. That was not the Shallenberger amendment, but it was close to it.

If in this resolution we had taken the number of men now in the military and naval service, plus the number of men in the four classes, as a basis, that being the total man power of the country, and provided that each State shall furnish soldiers according to the total number of men it has to its credit in the reservoir, that would have been a fair basis. We could then give credit for all of the volunteers and all of those who have since gone into the service by any other method.

I want to be frank with you and say that my attention was first attracted to this matter because of the great injustice done to my State, and it may be that I have been a special pleader. One can not be blamed, however, for attempting to protect his own people. That condition, however, no longer exists. I received a letter from the Provost Marshal General yesterday which states that in his last call for 233,000 men, as apportioned among the States, there were not enough men left in Arizona to complete her quota by over 200, and that he has ordered in this month of May all of the remaining men in class 1 from Arizona into camp. It is a moot question, so far as I am concerned, and I am not making any more special pleas, because Arizona has no more men left to plead for. But I do say that if this House will reject this motion, send this resolution back to conference, and the conferees study the question as they should, they can bring to us a law that will do justice by bringing the other States up to an equality with my own.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not just now. The fundamental reason why I am opposed to adopting this resolution as it is is this: It is entirely proper for the local authorities in any community to say who shall be first to go out of that community into this war, but no local authority ought to have the right to say how many shall go. When we apportion quotas on some mathematical basis and say, "you must furnish your quota from this State, this community, this district," then the local authorities have no concern as to what is going on anywhere else. All that they have to determine is who shall be first to go and who shall remain. But when we change to the class 1 basis, it is of immediate interest in Mississippi as to what Massachusetts is doing. The local boards that are doing their duty with a fine spirit all over this country will pause to lift up their heads and listen to some idle and perhaps evil rumor that some other local board, in some other place, is giving aid and comfort to slackers. Persuasive arguments can be, and have been used in favor of the class 1 basis, but they are all demolished by the fundamental fact that it is a bad policy to permit any local authority to determine the number of men that will be sent to the war from a particular community. If the local and district boards are to be told that henceforth when they place a man in one of the deferred classes they will not have to find another man to take his place, it takes no profound knowledge of human nature to predict that they will not exercise the same strict adherence to the law and the regulations as has characterized their decisions in the past.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman stated a moment ago that all of Arizona's class 1 men have gone.

Mr. HAYDEN. They will all have to go beginning on the 25th of this month.

Mr. MADDEN. And he is not concerned, but if the present law were to be enforced Arizona would be compelled to furnish men from class 2 and class 3, and those classes are not now to be invaded, and so Arizona is free to use the men in class 2, class 3, and class 4 to carry on her industries.

Mr. HAYDEN. Arizona's class 2 and class 3 men would not be taken if she were given credit for the large number of men she now has in the military service by reason of volunteering and by reason of the excessive number she was called upon to furnish under an unfair quota apportionment. Arizona wants credit for these men, and when that credit is given justice will be done everywhere. I am not asking that Arizona be favored; I am trying to bring every other State in the Union up to Arizona's high level.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. If you will permit, what interest has John Smith, of Arizona, we will say, who is with the flag now, in assisting John Brown from joining the colors and showing his patriotism and doing his full duty?

Mr. HAYDEN. None whatever. It is not the interest of the individual that I am considering at all. It is the public interest. It is not fair that one part of this country should be required to furnish more of man power, more of blood, than another. That burden should be spread equitably over all the States.

Mr. HICKS. But this is not a question of a war of the individual, of a section, or of a State. It is a war of the Nation, where all our resources must be called upon, and therefore it is not vital what one State has contributed in relation to another, however much we would like to see the proportion kept equitable. Loyalty and service know no sectional or State lines, and this contest is a national and not a State one, and should be so considered.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; but this is the United States, and it is made up of 48 States, and the whole 48, each one of them, should do its full duty.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course, it is obvious that the population of the United States is not distributed through its entire area in equal proportions of men in all the classes. One State might have by reason of natural situation or occupations more of one class than other States may have, so there will be no possible way of equalizing the men coming out of that class with the others of the same class in the other States.

Mr. HAYDEN. But the gentleman overlooks this one fact, that as long as you base the quotas on the four classes or upon the total number of men liable to military service no State can say how many men it shall furnish. But when we change to the basis of class 1 the same authority that places men in that class also makes up the total number who can be called to arms. That fact will make every local and district board interested in what the boards in other States may do. The fact that public sentiment in a State is favorable to the war will cause that State to furnish more men than some other community where there is not so much patriotism.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman point out any State in the Union that is not patriotic? The gentleman has insinuated they are not patriotic in some States.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman should know that every tabulation presented to the House shows that in different States different boards place a different percentage of men in these classes. Some very remarkable differences exist where the general conditions are the same. I hope that the expressions of faith in the patriotism of the members of these boards will materialize, because from now on we must depend upon the unaided devotion of these men to raise our armies.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman mean that conditions in all the States are the same?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not say that.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How will this credit business correct the judgment of those men to put men in the classes in which they should be placed?

Mr. HAYDEN. If credit is given for volunteers, it means that less men will leave a given community, which ought to have the benefit of their labor.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will.

Mr. CALDWELL. For one question, or rather two questions. Would the gentleman under any circumstances consent to the hiring of a substitute for a drafted man?

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course not. It was my amendment to the selective-draft act which prevented that very thing.

Mr. CALDWELL. Would the gentleman then favor a provision that would give a drafted man a substitute without pay?

Mr. HAYDEN. It does not mean anything of the sort.

Mr. CALDWELL. Of course it does.

Mr. HAYDEN. Credit for a volunteer does not run to the individual; it runs to the State or communit , and properly so.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the gentleman know in the consideration of giving credit that the only advantage that it could have had would be the drafted man would stay at home and the man outside the draft would have to go?

Mr. HAYDEN. Why should they not?

Mr. CALDWELL. Because then you are putting up a law that permits a man to get a substitute for himself and not pay for it even.

Mr. HAYDEN. To carry the gentleman's argument to its logical conclusion, volunteering is a crime and should not be permitted.

Mr. CALDWELL. No; it does not. It should be permitted, but it should not be a cloak for a man who will not go out and fight to hide behind and to stay at home.

Mr. HAYDEN. If a State or a community furnishes its full share of the number of men needed in this war, that is all that we should require, and that is the reason why we should vote down this amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. And let the slacker stay at home?

Mr. GORDON. No; he goes into the deferred classes, the slacker does.

Mr. HAYDEN. In conclusion, I desire to read a brief editorial from the Arizona Republican, which so accurately expresses my sentiments on this quota question that I shall make the editor's words my own:

ARIZONA IN THE NATIONAL ARMY.

Arizona has the proud distinction of having contributed proportionately more men to the National Army than any other State in the Union. On the basis of population of the former quotas Arizona sent four times as many men to the cantonments as it would have to send under the proposed basis of the number of men in class 1; that is, the number of men physically fit to go. We were given a fictitious population double the actual population, and that included aliens automatically exempt who, in some localities made up much more than half the registrants. A result of this arrangement is that in some of the counties every available man registered has already been taken so that they could contribute nothing to any future quota.

It was thought that in the next draft Arizona would be given credit for the excess of its contributions, but it is now said that that can not be done; that what we have given, we have given, and we must now start anew on the same footing with other States.

Nobody is disposed to offer any complaint. We do not regret that we have done more than our share, but that under the former awkward, illogical, and inequitable arrangement some of the States were not called upon for their full share when there was so much to be done.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama has 23 minutes and the gentleman from Nebraska 3 minutes.

Mr. DENT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, there have been some good arguments made in this debate to-day, and two of the best of them were by the gentleman from Arizona, who has just taken his seat, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. The trouble with these two arguments is that they were directed to an entirely different question from that which the House is now considering. Both of these gentlemen proceeded on the theory that by voting against the motion to recede that we would undo what both the House and Senate have done in fixing the quota according to class 1. There is now no parliamentary way in which we can undo that, and I am very glad there is not, because in my judgment it is the only right way to proceed.

The quota being fixed upon class 1, the only question left is the matter of credits. When you reduce it to its last analysis the question of credits has no place whatsoever when we leave the basis of population and pass over to the basis of fixing the quota upon class 1. The fixing of the quota upon class 1 means simply this, that we have by selection singled out among the citizens of this country the men who by reason of their age, by reason of their lack of dependent relations, or by reason of their not having gone into industries which are necessary, can best go and fight the battles of our country.

Having determined that question, the matter of credits is of comparatively slight importance. What does it amount to? It amounts simply to this, that, owing to the fact that a few more men from one State or locality have enlisted, or a few more have gone into special or technical troops, than from some other, that community will not be called upon in the next draft to furnish the same proportion of troops that some other community, which has not thus furnished volunteers, technical or special troops, would have to furnish. After all, when we have taken all the men in class 1, and there are now only about 2,000,000, the credits disappear.

For the present it simply amounts to a little difference in the order in which they will be called, because, in accordance with the quota basis we have fixed, all the men in class 1 must be taken from all the localities all over the country before we can invade class 2 in any community. Why should we put in this crazy-quilt arrangement, which makes confusion worse confounded, only for the purpose of drawing some men into service from certain communities before they would otherwise be called?

Now, gentlemen, that is the whole situation in a nutshell. We can not go back and consider the question of quota on the basis of population. That has gone by.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. While the House has acted on the matter, it has not yet been enacted into law and is involved in this very resolution we are now considering.

Mr. TILSON. But it is not in conference and can not come into conference on any action that this House can take.

Mr. KAHN. But if this bill fails, that classification may be considered.

Mr. TILSON. The bill must not fail. It would be a national calamity for this bill to fail, and it is a national misfortune that it is being delayed at all. It ought to be passed and passed soon.

After all, this is a national war, so far as we are concerned. It is not a war contributed to or conducted by a number of States. It is the war of the Nation to which all are contributing, and we ought to contribute to it according to the man power that is eligible for service. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and after that I propose to move the previous question.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House last month I called attention to the fact that the States were given credit in this second draft in an indirect way for their volunteers. That is absolutely the case, because class 1 in the various States of the Union would be materially augmented in almost every State if the men who had volunteered from those States had been classified. If they had not volunteered and had waited for the draft——

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he had any facts or figures from the War Department to substantiate the statement he just made?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. The War Department tells us that a very large percentage of the men who volunteered were men who would come in the draft age, between 21 and 31 years. We have had that statement made by War Department officials before our committee repeatedly.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. What proportion of those men are in class 1?

Mr. KAHN. Of course, they were not classified at all, because they volunteered. If they had waited for the draft and had not volunteered, fully 60 per cent of them would have been in class 1. Probably in many States 70 or 75 per cent, and in some States even more than that would have been added to class 1.

Now, in that way the States have received their credits. True, they have received them indirectly. In the first draft they all received their credits under the selective-draft law. In the new draft they receive them indirectly, as I have explained. But we are in war. Why should the War Department be charged with men who have gone into the Navy? This, so far, is a land war. The cry comes across the Atlantic, "For God's sake, hurry! Furnish men for our Army on the western front to fight the battles of the Republic." There have been no naval battles to speak of. Mostly all the fighting is on land. We need land forces. Why should the Army be charged with something like 300,000 men who have volunteered in the Navy? Bring in a bill for drafting men into the Navy, if that be necessary, and put men into the Navy. But when you need men to fight in the Army, why should you deduct by way of credits from the man power of this country the fighting forces of this country, capable of being added to our military organizations, the men who have volunteered in the Navy?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I only just wish to ask this: Is not the gentleman aware that the marines are in the trenches, and are doing as good fighting as anybody over there?

Mr. KAHN. There are something like 30,000 marines, and we need as soon as possible 5,000,000 men in arms. [Applause.] We will need fully 5,000,000 men in our Army before we get through. We will need, in my humble opinion, a minimum of 8,000,000 men in our Army before we get through. [Applause.] Let us not quibble about things, but look upon the magnitude of the task that lies before us. Let us look the situation squarely in the face. Let us not delude ourselves. Class 1, in my humble opinion, will be exhausted within a year, and then you will have to go——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. DENT. Would the gentleman from California like further time?

Mr. KAHN. I would like to conclude my statement.

Mr. DENT. How much time?

Mr. KAHN. Five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman has not stated that the Navy was not important, but has left the impression it was not doing much.

Mr. KAHN. The Navy is most important. I do not minimize the——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not true that you could not have gotten your Army over if it had not been for the Navy? [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. I know we could not have transported our Army over without the Navy, and I do not think the gentleman is more willing to give credit to the Navy than is "the gentleman from California." The Navy needs no defense at my hands, or the hands of anyone else for that matter. I know what the Navy has done for this country in all our wars. I do not minimize the great importance of that branch of our fighting service. But at the present time we need land armies. I am looking the conditions squarely in the face. I want my country and my countrymen to recognize what we are up against. Let us lose no time in getting and organizing our armies. We have got to win this war; we have got to win it. And the only way we can win it is by furnishing our man power speedily so that it can promptly and effectively meet the enemy upon the battle fields of Europe.

Just a word more. I recognize the fact that in many of the communities of this country men volunteer readily, gladly, patriotically. In the first draft the States got credit for those men. We are proceeding upon new lines in this second draft. We have sought no longer to take men indiscriminately, but to first take the men that can best be spared to fight the battles of the Republic. That is what the quota bill will do. That is why we appealed to the House not long ago to classify the fighting men of this country. Under the classification there are about 2,000,000 more men that will be available to go into the Army under the present draft law. Why, in my opinion, even when those 2,000,000 men are exhausted we will have to furnish many more men. We will probably have to increase the draft age to 40 years. England had to increase her draft age to 50 years. She has been almost four years in the war. Her man power is at a low ebb. We have hardly entered the war. According to the statement of the Secretary of War, published this very day, 500,000 of our boys are now "over there" in France. That is but a drop in the bucket after all, where millions are contending against each other in this war. And always remember that in this war, in the final analysis, my country, your country, our country will have to furnish the man power to win the war. [Applause.] I hope that the House will recede from its amendment and that the bill can speedily go to the President for his approval. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, have I any time left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes.

Mr. DENT. I said that I would make a motion for the previous question, but the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] would like to have three minutes. Then I positively declare that I will move the previous question.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman let me have a little time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for three minutes, and the time is running.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, if the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] to recede is not adopted, it delays the passage of this bill, and if it is never adopted by the House it defeats the bill. This is important legislation that has been urged by the War Department for months, and I want to call your attention to the fact that the gentlemen who are leading this fight against the motion to recede have opposed this bill in its entirety from the beginning. They opposed it in committee. They opposed it on the floor of the House. If they can prevent its enactment into law by the tactics they now employ, they will have at last accomplished their undertaking; they will have killed the bill.

This bill is too important to be trifled with. The War Department needs this legislation in the prosecution of the war. I appeal to gentlemen of this House to vote for the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to recede from the previous House amendment, which will complete the enactment of this legislation, which is so badly needed in the prosecution of the war. [Applause.]

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. DENT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to change my promise that I made a while ago, and I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota. After that I will move the previous question

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House the last time I came upon the floor from a very important committee meeting, in which I had been engaged all day, just as the vote was being taken on the House amendment, and had no time or opportunity to inform myself in regard to it. Under these circumstances I followed the lead of a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs and voted against the House amendment. Since then I have informed myself, and I am satisfied that I voted wrong, and I hope that the House will not now recede from its position.

As has already been said, the country at this time has a fine patriotic spirit, but I fear that spirit may not continue unless the people of the country are given to understand that the Congress of the United States is to continue so to legislate that the burden of this war shall fall equitably upon all the different sections of the country; that they will not call upon one section to furnish twice as much man power as another section of the country.

My people in California, even since the 1st of January, have volunteered very freely and generously. I am very proud of their patriotism and their manhood. But however willingly the people bear this burden, it is a burden, and I am unwilling by my vote to place upon them a larger part of it than rightfully belongs to them. From the beginning of the war nearly 50 per cent of the volunteers have been either under 21 years of age or over 31. Since January 1 all volunteers have been either under 21 or over 31. Nobody else has been allowed to volunteer.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. In just a minute. Therefore, if the House recedes from its position, these men who have volunteered will be used to save going into the Army men of other sections of the country where there have been no volunteers or few of them, as in Louisiana, for instance. The men in my State who have patriotically come forward and volunteered when they were not in class 1, and never could be placed in class 1, so that under the system that will be established if the House recedes the State could get no credit for them, will in effect be used to save from going into the Army men who have not volunteered in the State of Louisiana, for example, and who will not be drafted. California will thus be furnishing men for the Army that Louisiana should furnish.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Then the gentleman challenges the statement of his colleague from California [Mr. KAHN], that we want man power, and unless we pass this bill we will not get the number necessary? We get the same number of men either way.

Mr. HAYES. We do not; because many of these men who have volunteered are not in class 1, and never will be. As the basis of future drafts will be those in class 1 we shall not have credit for them.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I mean if we do not recede we will get the same number of men?

Mr. HAYES. We will get the same number of men, but not from the same section of the country. I am sorry to have to disagree with my distinguished colleague. I am glad to follow him in almost everything military, but in this case I think he is wrong.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman says we will get the same number of men, but they will not come from the same section of country?

Mr. HAYES. That is so.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But under this bill they do not come out equitably from the same class.

Mr. HAYES. That does not change the matter. These men, whether under 21 years of age or over 31 years, or between the ages of 21 and 31, should all be credited by the War Department to the quota of our State, not only when the second draft is made, but in all subsequent ones. No section of the country, because it is patriotic, so that its manhood volunteers freely, should for that reason have an added burden placed upon it by the law.

It should also be remembered that all men who enter the Army are taken from the industries of the section from which they come. Hence the section which furnishes more than its proportion of men must to that extent sacrifice its industries. I have used California to illustrate. It is not solely because my State is affected that I uphold the action of the House, but it is because I believe in a square deal for every section of our country.

I append the figures of Gen. Crowder, the Provost Marshal of the Army, showing what the effect upon the next draft of 800,000 men would be if the provision contained in the House bill should be retained. If each State should be given credit for the volunteers it has furnished, the several States would furnish the following percentages of their men in class 1 to make up the necessary 800,000 men:

	Per cent.		Per cent.
Louisiana	76	Nebraska	40
South Dakota	70	New Hampshire	39
Mississippi	68	Ohio	37
Arkansas	67	Texas	37
Alabama	65	Illinois	35
Wyoming	65	Idaho	35
Wisconsin	63	Delaware	34
Florida	61	Indiana	33
Georgia	61	Oregon	33
South Carolina	61	District of Columbia	27
Kentucky	57	New Jersey	26
Missouri	56	Vermont	24
West Virginia	55	Pennsylvania	21
Virginia	54	Colorado	19
Tennessee	53	New York	16
Oklahoma	53	Arizona	12
Michigan	51	Massachusetts	10
Kansas	50	Maine	8
Minnesota	50	Connecticut	4
Iowa	48	Utah	4
North Dakota	47	Washington	3
New Mexico	44	California	0
Maryland	43	Nevada	0
Montana	40	Rhode Island	0

Why should not the States whose men have not volunteered be obliged to furnish men for the Army until they bring their number up to offset these volunteers from the other States? This is just and equitable and I hope the House will not recede from its position.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, those who favor giving credit for men who have voluntarily enlisted are, in effect, endeavoring to exempt as many as they can from service. In effect their attitude is to have each community send as few men to the Army as they can. I believe each community and State should endeavor to send as many men as it can under the law. I believe thoroughly that the proposition laid down by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is profoundly sound and should ring to us with a strength that would bring immediate response.

The world war, if it is to be won by ourselves and our allies, must be won by the man power of the United States. We should pour forth our men with unstintedness, with enthusiasm, with vigor, and with energy.

Now, there is one phase of this that appeals to me. Many of these men who have volunteered have been most gallant. Why should we capitalize their gallantry and leave at home some slackers who are trying to get out of service? The slacker spirit says because some in a community have volunteered, that community's draft quota should be reduced accordingly; the patriotic spirit says that each community should point with pride to their volunteers and match them by a full draft quota. Let us strive to perform, not to escape. Let us send all men who are available and all whom we can get. [Applause.]

Then there is another class of the volunteers who need a little different treatment. They are all gallant in a way, but a great many of these volunteers have joined branches of the service that are not for the field. They are for technical positions; they are for clerical positions. And why in the name of common sense should we consider them when we are sending men to the fighting line? [Applause.] No, my friends; let us write this law as it ought to be written. Let us stop quibbling about trying to see how few men we can send. Let us try to enforce the law so as to see how many men we can send for the fighting line and not for clerical positions. [Applause.] Let us see how many men we can send for the fighting phalanxes which must be kept full all the time. Get men, and, for God's sake, hurry up! [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I regret that in my three minutes I will not have time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede from the House amendment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 235, nays 90, answered "present" 7, not voting 98, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill H. R. 10358, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TIMBERLAKE for one week, on account of a speaking engagement for the Red Cross campaign in Indiana.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the conference report just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen may be permitted to extend their remarks upon the conference report which has just been agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD upon the conference report just agreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that all gentlemen who spoke upon the conference report just agreed to shall be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken upon this motion to recede shall be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the third liberty loan in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the third liberty loan in Oklahoma. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who has just presented the conference report, as to when he expects to take it up for action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not seem to be here now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee when he expects to call up for consideration the conference report on the disagreement upon the bill which he has just presented?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not say to the gentleman, for this reason, that the Senate has the papers, and of course it must act before the House can take action.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Senate has acted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I have been advised the Senate has already taken action on the partial conference report.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. So far as I am personally concerned, I would like to take it up to-morrow, but of course I do not know whether I would be recognized for that purpose or not.

Mr. DYER. Is it the intention of the gentleman to give the House an opportunity to go on record again upon the amendments upon which there are disagreements?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a proposition that of course would have to be acted upon when we reach it. The conferees are only in disagreement as to two amendments, and of course I do not know what disposition the House will have to act upon either amendment.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state what those two are?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. One is an amendment in reference to the Subtreasuries; the other is the excess-compensation amendment, which carries with it the Borland amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and further insists upon its amendments numbered 38 and 90, still in disagreement.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. RAKER, Mr. RANDALL, Mr. WELLING, Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. CHURCH, and Mr. REED were given unanimous consent to extend their remarks on the conference report.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had unanimous consent to address the House this morning on the liberty loan in Kentucky, and I have two additional telegrams, and I ask unanimous consent to insert those in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in reference to the liberty loan in Kentucky. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TEMPORARY INCREASE OF THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 540).

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 124.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert "and all male persons." Also, amend the title by striking out the word "or," in line 2, and insert in lieu thereof "and all male persons"; and the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to S. J. Res. 124, providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The Senate receded from all of the amendments of the House except the amendment relating to the exemption of divinity and medical students. To this amendment the House receded and accepted the Senate provision.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. I move that the House refuse to accept the Senate amendment known as amendment No. 8, and I would like to have the Clerk read that.

Mr. DENT. I reserve the point of order on that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not catch the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I made the motion that the House refuse to agree to Senate amendment No. 8. I may probably be out of order——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee with all due deference whether he has a letter to read to the House upon this subject. If he has, we might just as well vote now and have the discussion by and by. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that his sense of humor is highly appreciated.

Mr. WALSH. I am asking the question in a serious spirit in an attempt to speed the business of the House.

Mr. DENT. I am very sorry I can not furnish the gentleman with a letter from the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he intends to explain the report. We do not know what it is.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, the statement on the part of the managers of the House shows that the conferees agreed to all of the amendments adopted by the House except the one providing for the exemption of divinity and medical students. Every other amendment adopted by the House was agreed to by the conferees. So that is really the only proposition that is submitted back to the House of Representatives in the adoption of this report. Now, if there are any gentlemen who would like to discuss that proposition——

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. DYER. Does this amendment have anything to do with the law that was previously passed, the national-defense act, which permitted medical students and divinity students certain rights with reference to the draft?

Mr. DENT. It does not undertake to change any provision of law of 1916.

Mr. DYER. It does not change the law?

Mr. DENT. It only affects those who come in under this new registration.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will yield to the gentleman from New York, a member of the committee.

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not want to ask a question, but I want to speak.

Mr. DENT. How much time?

Mr. CALDWELL. Ten minutes.

Mr. DENT. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], a member of the committee.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this provision that was stricken out of this bill by the House when it was here before us a few days ago contained the following words:

That students entering such theological or divinity schools after the approval of this act and during the continuance of the war and who would be subject to any future registration, as provided for in this act, may, upon the recommendation or request of the president or dean of such school, be exempt from the selective draft by order of the President.

Now, gentlemen, every Member of this House has been raised by parents who have taught him to respect the cloth, to respect the pastor, the priest, the rabbi, or the person who stands in the pulpit of the religious denomination of his family, and we have all been taught to love and respect and to honor that calling. And if you pass this amendment you open wide the door and invite every man who is devoid of human sympathy—that which makes a man a good Christian or a good Jew—to clothe himself in the cloth of the ministry, and you will invite him to become ordained to teach your faith and that of your children and your children's children, and you will by that act do one of the greatest things to destroy the love and confidence that we have in that religion that has made us the people that we are.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman talks as if he was not willing to trust the President of the United States on this question.

Mr. CALDWELL. This is not a question of trusting the President of the United States, because under the law as it stands now the President has authority to make rules and regulations by which any man who enters any of these schools or any of the professional schools may obtain a deferred classification or a deferred call, and when he graduates and has proven himself the character of man that that school wants to produce, then he can be assigned to the kind of duty that he has qualified himself to perform.

This thing as proposed here is vicious. It strikes at the very sent of our religion, and I do not believe that it is defensible. I think it is ill-advised, and I think it will tend to destroy the religion that we love. I have talked to men who are high in the counsels of the various denominations, high in the various Christian denominations, both Catholic and Protestant, and I have yet to find a man who has had this probable result pointed out to him that wants his religion defined by this class of men who would be invited to come into that rank and take the cloth as a cloak for their rascality. In some denominations practices may be such as to protect the church against this class of men, but we do not all belong to the same church; and in some churches I am sure the evil result is certain to occur. The President has the power under existing law to protect the worthy of every denomination and every creed and has shown a disposition to do so. I therefore think we ought to vote this thing down and protect religion, that which has made this country what it is. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I know that we are all weary, and I am only going to take five minutes. But I want to say to you very frankly that I shall vote against this conference report, because it violates a principle for which I have been standing and for which this House has been standing since the declaration of war. It is the first attempt to break down the rule of the selective draft—that all American citizens are equal before the law—in an attempt to exempt medical students and theological students.

In the law as we enacted it in the first instance we did exempt theological students then in the colleges, because they had decided to make that their life work, and as we exempted the ministers of the church we felt that those who were preparing themselves for the ministry prior to the passage of the law should also be exempted. Now, this proposes not to exempt only those who are now in the institutions, but any young man who may desire to enter these institutions hereafter, thereby making theological schools and seminaries places of refuge for the man who has sufficient money to enter. And, I might add, it would be his cemetery in the end, because the American people do not believe in exempting any special class.

Mr. LONERGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. LONERGAN. Is the gentleman in a position to inform the House whether or not in the fall of 1917 there was an increased registration in theological schools in this country over the preceding year?

Mr. McKENZIE. I have understood that that is true in some instances.

Mr. LONERGAN. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. McKENZIE. I only know by the statement of one of my colleagues that he had been so informed.

Mr. LONERGAN. It is not so, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman may be correct, but I protest against this opening of the door of escape from military service to any special class or classes of men.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question in order that we may understand the parliamentary situation? If we adopt the conference report, then these students are exempted by the law?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. If we reject the conference report, then does not the President have the power under the original law to exempt them if he sees fit to do so?

Mr. McKENZIE. Not unless he would exempt them on the ground of industrial or agricultural reasons. He could grant them furloughs and give them deferred classification.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Have they not exempted the medical students already?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is true.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. On what ground did they do that if the law did not authorize them?

Mr. McKENZIE. They did that on the ground that we would need perhaps more doctors in the service during the war, and that these young men, already being in college, should be permitted to finish their education.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague on the committee did not directly answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING]. The question of the gentleman from Illinois was to the effect as to whether or not they were exempt. They have not been exempted. The young men in the medical schools have not been exempted. Those who are already in those schools are being furloughed so that they can complete their studies, but there has been no exemption.

Mr. McKENZIE. I should have stated that more fully. I thank my colleague. They were permitted to finish their education under these furloughs.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Just another question. I am not exactly clear as to what this may result in. If this conference report is not concurred in, then the President can hereafter, under the law, exempt medical students?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; he can not exempt them. He can furlough them or give them deferred classification.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. He can permit them to go on and finish their course?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; under furlough.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. On the ground that they may need their services in the Medical Department of the Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. And he could—whether he has done so or not—exempt the divinity students on the ground that they may be needed as chaplains, could he not?

Mr. McKENZIE. I am not certain but that he may be able to do that. But that is not the question involved here. The question involved here is that the Congress of the United States is undertaking to exempt one or two favorite classes of our citizens. It would be a long guess to say that a young man who enters a medical school now would graduate in time to render any service in this war in the Medical Corps of the Army.

More than that, if a medical student is drafted, he would be put in the Hospital Corps of the Army, and that year or two of service would be worth more to him as a physician than any year or two that he might spend in college. I protest against the exemption of any class of citizens as a class. It is wrong. It is un-American. It not only will be resented, but is already being resented by ministers of this country, as will be shown by an article that I shall put in the RECORD in extending my remarks; a resolution passed by the Freeport Presbytery, representing all of northern Illinois, in which they protest against the exemption of ministers and say that the minister wants to do his duty the same as anyone else. Now, if we start the policy of exempting this class, we shall be called upon to exempt some other class, and again some other class, and it is unfair to the citizens of this country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the chairman of the committee yield my colleague five minutes.

Mr. DENT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. TOWNER. Just to clear up the situation, so that the membership of the House will understand it, I wish to ask this question: As the bill passed the House this proviso extending these theological and medical students was contained in the bill as we sent it over to the Senate?

Mr. McKENZIE. It is a Senate bill, remember, and we struck out that provision in our committee unanimously. It came to the House, and only 27 men in the House voted to retain it.

Mr. TOWNER. That is what I wanted to clear up. Now, according to the position in which the matter now stands, if you vote for the conference report, to sustain it you vote to put that provision in the act?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. So that the exemption will stand?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If you vote against the conference report, you vote against this exemption?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. I will say this, that this Senate amendment was overwhelmingly voted down by the House. I am not finding fault with the conferees. It was a matter of trade. The Senate conferees accepted a number of House amendments, and the House conferees accepted this, which was a Senate amendment. But I protest because it contains a vital principle, and I say that the House ought to vote down this conference report and send it back to the Senate, and thereby serve notice on the Senate of the United States that the House of Representatives is not yet ready to exempt any class of citizens from doing their military duty in this country. [Applause.] And if it is necessary to have the Senate get a letter from the President of the United States to bring it to time I would be glad to have him send one to the Senate, because I believe a more important vital principle is involved in this matter than there was in the other bill that we have beeen voting upon here this afternoon. [Applause.] That was a mere matter of credit. This is a matter of principle

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I understand, a medical student will be exempted if this provision is adopted, whereas heretofore a medical student who had about completed his education has been put in a deferred class, in order that the Government might make use of his scientific training?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. If we adopt this language, which states not that his service shall be deferred, but that he shall be exempt when he graduates next June, there is no way that the Government can force him to serve, even as a surgeon, and no way of utilizing his medical or surgical training, and it will get no service from him whatever?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. I am at a loss to know from what source the demand comes for this legislation. Surely not from devoted men of the class of those noble and dauntless chaplains of whom the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] told us the other day, who went over the top out into no man's land to reclaim the wounded from the battle field; not from the ministers of this country, because I have not had a single letter from any of them. If there is any demand for this legislation, it must come from the men who have money invested in these educational institutions and whose revenue has been cut down by the many heoric medical and theological students who have gone forth to battle for our country. Are the young men of the country asking for it? Not at all; and at this hour, when the conflict is so terrific, any red-blooded young American asking the right to seek refuge in a theological seminary or in a medical school instead of putting on the uniform of Uncle Sam, the same as the farmer boy, the miner, and the mechanic, would be doing a thing it would be an outrage to permit, and I would like to see this House stand up and say by its vote that America believes in the equality of all men before the law. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

To show the sentiment of the ministers of northern Illinois relative to exemption of ministers I desire to insert at this point a resolution which will speak for itself, and I simply wish to add that I am proud of this organization of God-fearing but patriotic men, for many of them live in my section of the State of Illinois:

[From the Freeport Journal-Standard, Apr. 25, 1918.]

MINISTERS ASK FOR NO FAVORS—WILLING TO ASSUME SAME MILITARY DUTIES AS OTHER MEN.

Ministers of the Freeport (Ill.) Presbytery have no desire to be relieved from any of the military duties or burdens imposed upon laymen. This was made clear at the spring session of the presbytery at Marengo Wednesday, when Rev. D. L. McNary, of the First Church of Freeport, presented the following memorial to the general assembly of the church, which was adopted unanimously:

"Because of our conviction that ministers of the gospel should have their equal share in every form of national service, we respectfully memoralize the general assembly to ask our National Government to so change exemption rules as to place ministers of the gospel in the same classification for military service as other citizens.

"We recognize the high tribute of the present rule to the value of the work of ministers of religion, but we believe they should in all matters stand upon an equality with other men."

The memorial was not presented to the laymen for action, as it concerned the ministers only.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the condition which confronted the conferees upon this measure. I realize that in seven out of eight of the matters in dispute the House conferees were successful. But, unfortunately, as has been expressed so well by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], that upon which they failed is a very fundamental proposition. [Applause.] I do not wish to add to the burdens of the conferees, nor do I wish to delay for a single instant the passage of this important legislation; but, sir, I do not believe that we ought to agree to a matter so fundamental as this, so vitally affecting the very principle upon which this draft law was builded, without at least the House having another opportunity of expressing itself upon that question and that question alone. Unfortunately, I was unable to be present when the vote was taken on this question before, but, as I remember it, this House went upon record by a very decided majority as not favoring the exclusion—as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has so happily expressed it—"of any class as a class." What will be the result if it goes forth to the country that this legislation is enacted? We do not know what the result will be.

Men who in the best of faith enter theological seminaries, feeling themselves called by a Higher Power to engage in that particular work, are likely all their lives, or at least for years to come, to have the finger of scorn pointed at them, and the charge repeatedly hurled at them that they entered upon that vocation to escape the operation of the military service in the hour of their country's peril. [Applause.] Of course, we shall need physicians. This includes both students of divinity and students of medicine. Some arrangements must be made whereby men can be trained in those vocations. I realize that. We shall have to have doctors and have to have priests and ministers. But, after this Nation has adopted as a fixed policy this plan of universal liability to service of those who are physically fit, it is a grievous error to pick out any particular class and say that they shall be exempted. [Applause.] Therefore, much as I regret to do it, I shall, so far as I am concerned, have to take the responsibility of voting against this conference report in order that we may have at least one more opportunity to express ourselves upon this very fundamental question. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more. I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I realize full well the sentiment that has provoked the gentleman's speech, and I thoroughly agree that it would be a very reprehensible performance for a man to break into a seminary in order to escape military duty.

Mr. GORDON. They would all be under that implication.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask the gentleman what method would he propose in order that the ministry may be continued and the medical profession continued?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to offer now a concrete proposition along that line. The gentleman will realize, of course, that I am not prepared to do it.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will follow that with another question, based upon the statement of Gen. Pershing as to the great necessity for chaplains and the constant call from the War Department for doctors. We can not have doctors without medical schools, and we can not have chaplains without seminaries.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Classification rather than exemption will cover the proposition.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will say that the President now has authority under the law to make a regulation that will take care of that situation, and he has done so so far as doctors are concerned.

Mr. DENT. I will state that the President did that as to doctors in the Medical Corps, and I thought that he might be able to do it in this case, but I think I made a mistake.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, in the original draft act those who were then in theological seminaries and in medical schools were excluded, for the very obvious reason that we were excluding ministers themselves. At least I think so——

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think ministers of the Gospel were themselves excluded by the terms of the act, and there could be no imputation against young men who, prior to the time when we thought of going into the war, had gone into these schools. But this is a very different proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some provision made for ministers of the Gospel after the war is over, and for doctors after all the doctors that we have now are killed off, as may happen during this war?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; and we will need school teachers and farmers and workers of all classes, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this statement. It is true that under the act of May 18, 1917, the President took care of medical students by putting them into the enlisted reserve corps and not calling them into the service. I was under the impression—perhaps I may have been wrong, but I think not—that he could take care of the same situation so far as theological students were concerned, and when this bill was before the House I made that statement. But here is the proposition that is presented to the House: Shall we hold up this bill upon the question as to whether a few boys who have become 21 since the 5th day of June, 1917, who want to study medicine and who want to study theology, shall be exempted or not? That is all there is to this proposition.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman permit me to read the language of the act?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The language is that it may be done upon the order of the President. There is nothing explicit in this bill that exempts these men, but after all the matter is placed in the hands of the President.

Mr. DENT. The President can take care of it, and I hope he will, and I believe he will, just as he took care of the medical students.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, the first part of it is not dependent upon action by the President. It says that those who are now in a medical school—in this time when the great need of the Army will be doctors—those who are now the deferred class in medical schools shall be exempt, not from further military service, but even from service in the Medical Reserve Corps. It is not dependent upon the action of the President. I absolutely protest against it, because we need doctors in the Army, and this says they will exempt doctors from service in the Army. It is absolutely inconsistent.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Is it not a fact that they do not need them until they are doctors?

Mr. CRAMTON. But when they become doctors then they still shall be exempt.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Oh, the man who becomes a doctor is absolutely amenable to the law of the land.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, each of your conferees voted to strike this provision from the Senate bill when it was considered in the House. There was a record vote on that part of it that referred to divinity students. Your conferees held out in conference, and I want to say for the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that they did everything they could do to induce the Senate conferees to yield. They held out longer than I did on the proposition, and it is only just to them that I make that statement of fact to the House. There were eight amendments in conference. The Senate conferees yielded on seven of them, and on this one they refused to yield. We either had to yield on this one or bring the bill back to the House in disagreement. I suppose every man will vote for what he thinks is best; I grant that every man will do that; but, as the chairman of the committee has said, shall we delay this legislation—and it must be passed speedily if the registration is to be had on the 5th of June, which is now planned—shall we delay this legislation because of this one difference between the two bodies? That is the question that is involved. Gentlemen must bear in mind that when conferees go into conference they must give and take. Your conferees can not go into conference and force the Senate to yield on every proposition.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to get clear on this. Does this, ipso facto, exempt all of those, or does it subject them to the approval or upon the action of the President, or leave it in his discretion to exempt or not exempt?

Mr. FIELDS. It exempts those now in the schools.

Mr. STEVENSON. It exempts those already in; that is, before this legislation is passed?

Mr. FIELDS. And the law of 1917 did the same thing for the same classes of students who had entered their institutions prior to the enactment of that law.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand; but as to those entering hereafter—does it exempt them?

Mr. FIELDS. That is a question for the President to decide. No blame should attach to your conferees. They have done the best they could. It is a question of whether you will accept the conference report or vote it down. If you vote it down, you delay this legislation, the immediate enactment of which is urged by the War Department.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I have seen it stated in the press that the number of students in seminaries have been increased since the war was declared. The number of students usually in the seminaries of this country is about 4,500. Since the war began the number has decreased to 2,500. If the larger number were now in attendance and those should be taken for the Army, it would amount to very few in the building up of the Army. Mr. Speaker, we must have physicians. There is no call so imminent and so loud as medical service in time of war, and if you are going to deplete the medical schools while they are in attendance, to do the work that the war demands, it is to me a serious proposition. It seems to me we ought not to lose our heads here in a furore demanding "Vote!" "Vote!" until we know what we are voting on.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to ask the gentleman if the proposition does not provide that the request for exemption must come from the dean or the president of the theological seminary and be approved by the President. Does not that take charge of the matter?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to read another statement here from one of the leading men of New England:

> We want to put as many of our young clergymen as possible into the trenches with our boys at the front, where they can give the strongest moral support and comradeship to the boys as they go over the top. We have already presented 14 of the young clergymen from this diocese for commissions, and 4 are already at the front in France. The others expect to be there within a few weeks. We have 20 more volunteers on our list who will be released as soon as we can provide for the vacancies that will result from their entrance into military service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield me one minute more.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS (continuing the reading)—

> Our normal quota each year is only 12 for ordination. Within the past year 10 of our clergymen died and 14 were permitted to go into service at the front. Therefore we were obliged to call our seminarians for ordination before the time prescribed for the conclusion of their seminary course. If the draft calls those who remain in the seminary our source of supply will be completely exhausted, and we shall find it impossible to respond to the call of Gen. Pershing and the War Department for more chaplains.

I voted the other day to forbid these exemptions, but, my friends, this is not all on one side. I say again that in the midst of war we must not deplete our medical schools, and we ought not to deplete our theological seminaries. In time of war's havoc we must not omit all attention to the spiritual necessities of the race.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the agreeing to the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CALDWELL) there were—ayes 66, noes 74.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-six Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 181, answered "present" 2, not voting 129, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] moves that the House further insist on its disagreement——

Mr. DENT. Further insist and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. And ask for a conference.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Should not the motion of the gentleman from Alabama be to further insist upon the House amendment and ask for a further conference?

Mr. DENT. I thought that was the motion. I do not know whether I stated it correctly or not, or whether the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] misunderstood me.

Mr. WALSH. I did misunderstand. I presume when this appears in the House the gentleman will see to it that there is a letter accompanying it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] moves that the House further insist on its amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Upon the House Joint Resolution 123, the House by a vote decided to recede. There was a conference report presented. However, I understand the gentleman from Alabama has an inquiry to make, and I desire that he make it.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will give me time, I will state that I was going to ask that the conference report, which was in disagreement on Senate Joint Resolution 123, be laid on the table. And I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 123 lie on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the conference report just rejected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the conference report which has just been rejected. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PURCHASE OF LIBERTY BONDS BY ROCK ISLAND RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to proceed for two minutes with reference to the liberty-bond sale.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes relative to the liberty-bond sale. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter to-day from a friend of mine in the service of the Rock Island Railroad Co. in which he tells me about the sale of bonds among the employees of that great railroad organization.

The Rock Island Railroad system traverses 14 States. It has in its employ 41,167 persons, and every man and woman in that great organization bought liberty bonds. [Applause.] Every department of that organization stands 100 per cent subscribers to the bonds sold in the third Liberty loan. These 41,167 persons bought bonds to the amount of $2,923,100. It seems to me that that achievement is wonderfully significant. It shows the unanimity of the sentiment of the American people with reference to this war. It demonstrates to our allies that which must be very encouraging, it demonstrates to our enemies that which must be very discouraging, namely, the fact that the American people are heart and soul in this war to a complete and a conclusive victory for human freedom and human rights. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, accompanying that letter is a statement issued by Mr. L. M. Allen, general chairman of that organization. It is brief and relates to the fine achievement of the people connected with the Rock Island, and it expresses a just pride in the patriotism of the people for whom he speaks and whom he represents.

I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing that statement. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD as stated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the statement referred to:

The Rock Island System has under its banner to-night everyone of its great family of employees enrolled for the support of the Nation. All are subscribers to the third liberty loan.

The pledges have poured in from every artery of the complex organism of a great railway; its employees are to be found in every walk of life and in every occupation of railway effort, not only in the 14 States through which its lines of railway pass, but scattered throughout this vast country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, wherever they had gone, in the performance of their railway work, or in the service of the Nation. Everyone has responded to the call, from the humblest employee to the president, all alike and all equally important in this unanimous response.

Its vast army of over 41,000 railway operatives have thus reiterated to the country that the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co. is 100 per cent loyal, patriotic, and faithful. By this united response of all its loyal men and women to the call of the Nation they have effectively shown to the people of the entire country the wonderful organization of the Rock Island as a great railway system, as well as the broad foundation upon which it rests; a solidarity of men and women who are grouped together for the efficient operation of this transportation machine and for every act that spells for its welfare as being indicative of the welfare of the country.

Each member of our great family can well be proud to-day that he or she is a "Rock Island railroader."

We have pledged, through our subscription cards, our support to the Nation. This means, for most of us, a readjustment of our finances during the coming 10 months in order to meet the obligations which we have requested our company to undertake in our behalf, because the railway company must buy these bonds and hold them subject to our final payment. This requires a fixed determination on the part of everyone that, irrespective of what may come, we are going to keep the faith which we have asked the Rock Island to pledge to the Government for us.

Let it be our earnest prayer that this loan to which we have pledged ourselves may be the medium that will ultimately bring our dear country again to the safe port of peace and prosperity. But we know that this can not be brought about until, through the efforts of this Nation, the world shall become a safe and decent place in which to live.

Now that we are 100 per cent let us put the Rock Island in the three million class.

L. M. ALLEN,
General Chairman.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday it be in order to consider what is known as the Overman bill, and that that bill shall be the continuing order until disposed of, not to interfere with conference reports and privileged matters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that next Monday, after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of the business on the Speaker's table, the Overman bill shall be in order and be the continuing order until disposed of, not to interfere with conference reports and privileged matters. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say there are two very important measures before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and next Monday is the day set apart by the rules for consideration of District business. The two measures to which I refer are, first, the emergency resolution, which the Senate passed day before yesterday, forbidding the ousting of tenants from houses in the District of Columbia. That is a temporary measure, to take the place of a permanent measure, which it is expected will be passed later on. And the other bill is one extending the time for which alley houses may be occupied. Under the law certain alley houses can not be occupied after the 1st day of next July. The Senate has passed a bill extending that time until one year after the war is over. These are two urgently pressing bills, and I wish to add to the request made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that we have unanimous consent to consider those bills as soon as the Overman bill is out of the way, not to interfere with Calendar Wednesday or with matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me suggest this to the gentleman. As long as District day is only one day—that is, Monday—will the gentleman accept the suggestion, and I will ask unanimous consent for it, to make Saturday of next week District day; that is, to consider those bills on Saturday?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say in reply to that that the bill to prevent tenants from being ousted was reported by the Senate committee unanimously. I understand it passed the Senate without a dissenting vote, and the House District Committee to-day has made a unanimous report on that, and it is a very urgent matter. People are being put out by the hundreds, and this will stop it.

Mr. KITCHIN. As to making it a day certain, I will say the Overman bill will surely take Monday and Tuesday. I think all day Monday will be consumed by debate, and possibly longer—possibly it may go until Thursday.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then I ask that we be permitted to take these bills up immediately we get through with the Overman bill.

Mr. KITCHIN: You mean the day following the disposition of this?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is entitled to only one day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would be perfectly willing to take the day following.

The SPEAKER. Now, what is the request agreed on?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask that the District Committee have the day next following the conclusion of the bill to which the gentleman from North Carolina has just referred, not to interfere with Calendar Wednesday or with matters on the Speaker's table or conference reports.

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if I am correct in assuming that he expects to give full and reasonable opportunity for debate?

Mr. KITCHIN. I should say yes. I think it is a matter that ought to be fully and freely discussed.

Mr. HAYES. With the right of amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; with the right of amendment.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious to get up the "food-production bill," and the Committee on Rules this morning reported unanimously a rule to consider that bill. I would like to know whether or not this agreement will interfere with the consideration of that bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say that this agreement would not interfere with it further than to except the Overman bill and one day for the District Committee. That would come in ahead of your bill. You would have a full day next week—Friday or Saturday, perhaps. If we get through the Overman bill by Tuesday night or Thursday night, that would certainly give you Saturday.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] whether or not there would be a probability that this bill could certainly be considered some time next week? I am anxious to have it considered this week, if possible.

Mr. KITCHIN. It could perhaps be considered next week.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Would there not be an opportunity to get it up before next week?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I think not.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. When does the gentleman think it could be taken up?

Mr. KITCHIN. If we can finish to-morrow the pension bill and the prison bill, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] might get in Saturday of this week on his food-production bill. I think the pension bill ought to be passed before that, and I think we ought to finish up this Atlanta Penitentiary bill.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I desire to state in this connection that the Secretary of Agriculture is very anxious that this bill be considered at the very earliest possible time, for the reason that the organization under the present food-production bill expires on the 30th of June, and it is necessary to maintain the present organization, and in order to do so the passage of this bill is necessary as soon as possible. It is necessary to pass the bill to continue the present organization.

Mr. KITCHIN. It at least ought to give way to the Overman bill and to the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] if he does not finish it Saturday.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I would not object to that if it will expedite business. The food-production bill is a very important bill, and it is necessary to pass it as soon as possible, but I want to join in every effort to expedite business and to aid my splendid leader. I am willing at all times to defer to his good judgment. All I ask is to get in as soon as possible.

Mr. BURNETT. I was not in the Hall when this discussion began, but I would not want anything to interfere with the conference report on the housing bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it would not at all.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, if he gets unanimous consent for District bills, what bills he proposes to call up?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. First I would call up the Senate joint resolution to prohibit the ousting of tenants, and after that I would call up the alley bill, and after that, if I had time, I do not know what I would call up.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is there a unanimous report on the Overman bill from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand there is a unanimous report on the bill as far as it went, but some Members wish to add amendments to it. I do not know whether there is a minority report or not.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think there could be said to be a unanimous report.

Mr. KITCHIN. Several members of the committee desire to add amendments, and I am free to say I expect to vote for some of the amendments.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say further that I have not talked with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee about this, but does the gentleman from North Carolina know whether or not it is agreeable to the members of the Committee on the Judiciary to take the matter up for consideration on Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say to the gentleman that really the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary spoke to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, asking for a rule to take it up this week. I spoke to both gentlemen and asked them to postpone it; not to bring in a rule this week. I told them I was very certain we could get a unanimous agreement to consider it by Monday, and that would allow time for Members to take it up and consider it, whereas if we had insisted on a rule, as the chairman thought proper to do, we would be cut off from that opportunity to study the bill. It gives us more time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman certainly does not mean to contend that if the Committee on Rules brings in a rule we are prohibited from allowing liberal debate?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. If we had brought in a rule to consider it this week we would not have the opportunity to study the bill that we would have if it is postponed until Monday. Some of us wanted to consider the bill this week.

Mr. WALSH. In response to the query propounded by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], I am of opinion that there are one or two members of the Committee on the Judiciary who expect to file minority views. I do not know whether they have changed their minds on that or not, but as I recall it there are one or two who reserved the right to file minority views.

Mr. KITCHIN. They will have that right, certainly.

Mr. HICKS. May I ask if the gentleman is still an optimist about the time of the adjournment of Congress from the 1st to the 15th of July?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that if what I saw in the New York World to-day is true, that we shall have to bring in a new revenue bill of two or three billion dollars at this session, we shall get away from here perhaps in time enough to cast a vote if we do not live too far from here. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. In the primaries?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; in the election. If we do not have to pass a revenue bill, we shall get away from here by July 1.

Mr. HICKS. That is a very clear explanation.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the New York World control the situation? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. No. The gentleman must have been sleeping when I made the remark. I said if it be true, as the New York World says, that the administration will demand a new revenue bill, and we should take it up, those who live as near Washington as I do would perhaps be able to get home in time to vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Has the administration said anything to the gentleman, as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, about the revenue bill at this session?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. GARNER. Then I do not suppose it would suggest it to the New York World, if not to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I have known some administrations of late to confer with newspaper men and tell them what ought to be done long before any Member of Congress was told; but certainly they have never told any Member of the House. So I can either assume that the New York World is not telling the truth or I can assume that some members of the administration have talked with them and told them about it before they told us. But I do not know about that, of course.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it in contemplation at this session to change the income-tax law so as to make the income tax payable in installments?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think we are in a position to say yet. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue told me two weeks ago that he was going to tabulate the probable revenue receipts as early as he could, and he thought he would be through about the 10th of May. That would be a tabulation of the amount of taxes which he thought we would raise. He was under the impression at that time that we would raise several hundred million dollars more than we had anticipated. We would also know by that time the amount of the oversubscription to the bonds; and if the oversubscription to the bonds and the extra amount of taxes to be raised would be sufficient to put the Treasury in such a financial condition as to justify a resolution to make the income tax payable in installments we would do so. I have not heard anything from Mr. Roper, but I propose to go down there to-morrow and find out.

Mr. WALSH. Would it seriously interfere with the plans that have been made if the gentleman should ask to take up the Overman bill on Tuesday instead of Monday next?

Mr. KITCHIN. If we did that it would probably go over and cut out some of these other bills that we want to consider.

Mr. WALSH. I think we could give it much more thorough consideration if we did that.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that, for the reason that I conferred with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] after I had had a talk with Mr. WEBB, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Mr. POU, the chairman of the Rules Committee, who were discussing the bringing in of a rule this week. We thought if they would not do that, but would give the membership of the House an opportunity to investigate and consider the Overman bill until Monday, they ought to get unanimous consent to take it up Monday.

Mr. WALSH. I will not insist.

Mr. FESS. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his request.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Overman bill be in order to be considered Monday, and be the continuing order until disposed of, and that the day following the disposition of the Overman bill be given to the consideration of bills from the District of Columbia Committee, not to interfere with conference reports or Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that next Monday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table, the so-called Overman bill shall be in order and be the continuing order until disposed of, and that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] shall have the day following the completion of the Overman bill for the consideration of District business, none of this to interfere with conference reports or Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make another request for unanimous consent. At the suggestion of several gentlemen on both sides, I ask unanimous consent that the business of Calendar Wednesday on next Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Calendar Wednesday business for next Wednesday be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. I object for the present. When the time comes I may not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.
